

Contents

Acknowledgments	ix
Abbreviations	x
Introduction: The Paradoxical Logic of Expression	1
Meaning, communication, and phenomenological disruptions	5
The embodied experience of expression	9
An eidetic versus a phenomenological description of the paradoxes of expression	16
The weight of the metastable: Simondon and the paradoxical logic of expression	22
Metaphor and the trajectory of sense	27
Expression and the practice of reading	37
1 Against the Establishment: Early Hints of an Expressive Logic	41
The union of the soul and the body: An “anxious trembling” “quickly mastered”	42
A young Schelerian against the Sorbonne	46
A young Marcellian: The body, mystery, and creation	52
2 Expression and The Structure of Behavior	59
Science and the logic of expression	62
Structure and expression: Pensée naturée in the human order	68
“But our conclusion is not that of critical philosophy”	74
3 Expression and Phenomenology of Perception	79
The logic of expression against classical theories of perception	80
The body as expression	84
Expression and the perceived world	94
Time and freedom as expression	98
4 The Politics of Expression	103
“The War Has Taken Place”	104
Humanism and contingency	108

Encroachment and expression	116
The adventures of an expressive dialectic	119
5 The Threads of Silence: Painting, Speaking, Writing	127
“Cézanne’s Doubt” and expressing what exists	128
Saussure and the phenomenology of language	132
Reading the vestiges of The Prose of the World	136
“Indirect Language and the Voices of Silence”	139
6 “The Fundamental of All Culture”: Painting, Ontology, Reading	151
“Eye and Mind”	152
Philosophical interrogation: Expressing The Visible and
the Invisible	161
Expressing the intertwining: The flesh as expression	172
Epilogue	181
Notes	185
Bibliography	199
Index	207