

“An invaluable resource for anyone who wants a better understanding of relationships between religion and the development of the modern world. It is already a required textbook in my religion and colonialism classes.”

Philip P. Arnold, Associate Professor of Religion, Syracuse University, USA

“This is an important and needed addition to an important cultural inquiry.”

Charles H. Long, Professor Emeritus, History of Religions, University of California, Santa Barbara, USA

“Think we’ve moved beyond multiple colonial contaminations in our globalizing world? Think again! Read Jennifer Reid’s invaluable record of how philosophical and vehement religiosity, the long events and tentacles of colonial domination infiltrate our dreams of globalizations and new agendas.”

David Carrasco, Neil L. Rudenstine Professor of the Study of Latin America, Department of Anthropology, Harvard Divinity School, USA

“Worthy of a wide and mixed readership: it is sophisticated in conceptualization; creative in organization and categorizations; and smart and strategic in selection of sources.”

Vincent L. Wimbush, Director, Institute for Signifying Scriptures, USA

Religion, Postcolonialism and Globalization: A Sourcebook shows how the roots of our globalized world run deeper than the 1980s or even the end of WWII, tracing back to 15th century European colonial expansion through which the “modern world system” came into existence.

The Sourcebook is divided into four sections, each with a critical introduction by the editor, a series of readings, and discussion questions based on the readings. Canonical readings in religion, globalization and postcolonialism are paired with lesser-known texts in order to invite critical analysis. Extracts explored include work by Max Weber, Edward Said, David Chidester, and Kant, as well as political documents such as the British Parliament’s 1813 Act regarding the East India Company. Sources range from the origins of the common phrase “jihad vs. McWorld” in the work of Benjamin Barber, to personal essays reflecting religious responses to globalization.

Focusing on a history of religions approach, Religion, Postcolonialism, and Globalization provides an alternative to existing sociological work on religion and globalization. Guidance on useful web resources can be found on the book’s webpage.

Jennifer Reid is Professor of Religion at the University of Maine Farmington, USA. Her research interest is primarily in methodology in the study of religion and she has published extensively on issues relating to the relationship between indigenous and non-indigenous peoples in modernity and late-modernity.
