

CONTENTS

List of Abbreviations / vii

Preface / ix

Outline of Ordinatio 1.3 / 1

Introduction. Scotus on being and cognition:

Ordinatio 1, distinction 3 / 9

Univocity of being and natural knowledge of God, 10 • The first object of the human intellect, 14 • The adequate object of the human intellect, 17 • Certain knowledge and illumination, 22 • Intellective memory and intelligible species, 25 • The causes of intellection, 30 • Trinity in man: Trace and image, 36

PART 1: ON THE POSSIBILITY OF HAVING KNOWLEDGE OF GOD

Question 1: Can God be known naturally by the intellect of the wayfarer? / 41

Question 2: Is God the first thing that is naturally known by us in our present state? / 42

Question 3: Is God the first natural and adequate object of the human intellect in its present state? / 83

Question 4: Can we know a certain and genuine truth by natural means without any special illumination? / 114

PART 2: ON THE TRACE OF THE TRINITY

Single Question: Is there in every creature a trace of the Trinity? / 147

PART 3: ON THE IMAGE OF THE TRINITY

Question 1: Does the intellective part of the soul contain memory as having an intelligible species naturally preceding the act of thinking (intelligendi)? / 167

vi CONTENTS

Question 2: Is the intellective part of the soul, taken properly, or a component of it, the total cause generating actual knowledge or the reason for generating it? / 197

Question 3: Is the object, as present in itself or in a species, or the intellective part of the soul the main cause of the production of a cognition? / 248

Question 4: Is there an image of the Trinity distinctly present in our mind? / 254

Notes to the translation / 269

Notes / 277

Further reading / 287

References / 293