

Contents

1 Science Education as a Site of Struggle	1
Introduction	1
References	6
2 The Constitution of Subjectivities: Discourse, Practices, and Repetition	7
The Importance of Althusser, Butler, and Foucault's Work	9
Subjectivity and the Discourses of Biology Textbooks	12
Methodology for Analyzing Science Curriculum/Textbooks.	13
Some Directions for Critical Analysis.	15
Intersections of Sex/Gender and Sexuality and Race.	16
Neocolonialisms: The Colonizer and the Colonized	16
Constituting Depoliticized Neoliberal Subjectivities	17
The "Ethical Subject" of Science Education	18
Resistances and Reformulations	19
References	20
3 The Ethical Subject of Science Education	23
Ethics and Science Education	23
Ethics in the Science Education Literature.	24
Ethics, Textbooks, and Curriculum.	26
Continuing with a Foucauldian Methodology	27
What Qualifies as an "Ethical Question or Exercise" in These Texts?	29
Analysis of Ethical Questions and Exercises in Biology Texts	31
Contextualizing Ethical Themes in Textbooks: Governance, Populations, and Lifestyle	32
Government Regulation and Policy Recommendation	33
Health and Populations.	34
The Individual and Lifestyle Choices	36
Thinking About Relations to Self.	37

Toward Different Approaches to Ethics in Science Education	38
Biotechnology, Medical Research, and New Considerations for Life	38
Politicizing Questions of Environmental Destruction	39
References	39
4 Science Education and Subjectivity in (Bio)Political Context	43
Biopower and Biopolitics	44
Two Modernities	45
Biopolitics and Science Education	48
Colonization and the Power to Make Die	48
Neoliberalisms.	49
The Regulatory and Disciplinary Poles of Sex/Gender and Sexuality	49
Biotechnology and Biosubjects	50
A Biopolitical Context as an Ethico-Political Frame	50
References	51
5 Egalitarian Politics and the Dimensions of an Ethical Self	53
Ethical Subjectivity and Relations of Self	54
Uniting Ethics and Politics: Equality and the Right to Speak	58
The Contradiction of Ethics and Politics	59
A Politicized Ethics of Equality and Resistance!	60
Conclusion: Leaving an Anthropocentric Ethics Behind	61
References	61
Afterword: Different Concepts and Tools Will Be Needed to Bring About an Ethically and Politically Engaged Science Education	63