

Table of Contents

INTRODUCTION

Gregor Feindt / Anke Hilbrenner / Dittmar Dahlmann
Between “Barbed Wire Disease” and Judenexerzieren: Why the History of Sport in Penal and Internment Camps Matters 9

Alan Kramer
The World of Camps: A Protean Institution in War and Peace 23

SECTION I

Gregor Feindt / Anke Hilbrenner
Camps as Nomos of Modernity? 43

Floris J.G. van der Merwe
Sport in Concentration and Prisoner of War Camps
during the Anglo-Boer War, 1899–1902 49

Panikos Panayi
Work, Leisure, and Sport in Military and Civilian Internment Camps
in Britain, 1914–1919 63

Christoph Jahr
“We are pursuing sport because such work is not demeaning”:
Forms and Functions of Sport in Internment Camps
during the First World War 87

Doriane Gomet
Sport behind the Wire: Primarily a Life-Saving Exercise? 103

SECTION II

Anke Hilbrenner
Bodies in Camps between Destruction and Perfection 125

Felicitas Fischer von Weikersthal
Between Coercion and Athletic Ambition: The Form and Function of Physical Culture in Soviet Forced Labour Camps 131

Kim Wünschmann
Judenexerzieren: The Role of “Sport” for Constructions of Race,
Body, and Gender in the Concentration Camps 153

Veronika Springmann
“He liked us, because we were good athletes, good workers” –
Productive Bodies in Nazi Concentration Camps 175

SECTION III

Gregor Feindt
Camps Producing Identity and Memory 193

Mathias Beer
Sport in Expellee and Refugee Camps in Germany after the Second World War: Expressing Identity between Bačka and Stuttgart 199

Marcus Velke
Recreation, Nationalisation, and Integration: Sport in Camps for Estonian and Jewish DPs in Post-War Germany 223

Dieter Reinisch
Performing Resistance: Sport and Irish Republican Identity in Internment Camps and Prisons 245

CONCLUSION

Manfred Zeller
Games of Transgression: Camp Sports and the Fate of the Body Modern 269

Contributors to this Volume 279