

Contents

Preface ix

Acknowledgments xi

Introduction 1

PART 1 The Land of the Free and the Home of the Hoax

Slave Narratives and White Lies	21
The Forrest and the Tree	22
Danny Santiago and the Ethics of Ethnicity	25
Go Ask Amazon	29
"I Never Saw It As a Hoax": JT LeRoy	33
Margaret B. Jones, Misha Defonseca, and "Stolen Suffering"	38
Minority Literature and Postcolonial Theory	42

PART 2 French and Francophone, Fraud and Fake

What Is a (French) Author?	45
The French Paradox and the Francophone Problem	48
The Real, the Romantic, and the Fake in the Nineteenth Century	51
The Single-Use Hoax: Diderot's La Religieuse	54
Mérimée's Illyrical Illusions	59
Bakary Diallo: Fausse-Bonté	74
Elissa Rhaïs, Literacy, and Identity	77
Sex and Temperament in Postwar Hoaxing: Boris Vian and Raymond Queneau	81
Did Camara Lie? Two African Classics Between Canonicity and Oblivion	90
Gary/Ajar: The Hoaxing of the Goncourt Prize and the Making-Cute of the Immigrant	104
Who Is Chimo? Sex, Lies, and Death in the Banlieue	120
Conclusion to Part 2	124

PART 3 I Can't Believe It's Not Beur: Jack-Alain Léger,
Paul Smaïl, and Vivre me tue

Introduction	125
Before "Paul Smaïl"	129
Vivre me tue (Living Kills Me, or Smile)	136
The Popular Press Reads Vivre me tue	147
Smaïl Speaks (by Fax)	152
The Leak	154
Did "Hundreds" of Readers Write to Paul Smaïl?	157
Truth and Lies à la Léger	161
The Scholars Weigh In	162
Azouz Begag's Outrage and the Right to Write	167
Reading: A Choice?	172
The Parts He Played	175
Conclusion	179

Notes 183

Index 233