

Contents

	Acknowledgments	vii
	Note on translations	ix
	Introduction: on reading arts of travel	1
1	Defining the Grand Tour	17
	Two complex legacies: Justus Lipsius and Montaigne	18
	A century of ambivalence: opinions on travel in the seventeenth century	27
	Dictionaries	37
	A Grand Tour for the Enlightenment?	45
2	From touring to training: the case of diplomacy, 1680–1830	55
	From Grand Tour to missions abroad	56
	The diplomat's art of travel: the apology of travel in Pecquet's L'esprit des maximes politiques	61
	'It is a bee that we are sending out': mobility within diplomats' professional training	67
	The archives and the field: count d'Hauterive's travelling programmes (1826)	74
3	Trading with men, dealing with God: abbé Pluche's ideas on travel	85
	The educator and the idea of travel	86
	A merchant inspiration for travel?	91
	Piety and the travel experience	100

4	Travelling on a Moebius strip: Émile's travels	107
	Forbidding or restricting: Muralt's Lettre sur les voyages and Rousseau	109
	Rousseau as apodemic author	114
	Rousseau as innovator: transportation, itinerary, method	120
	There and back again: the moment of return	126
	Gendering ars apodemica : Madame de Genlis and Rousseau	129
5	The end of an era? The prize contest of the Academy of Lyon (1785–1787)	139
	Travel as a topic at the academies before Lyon	141
	Reconstructing the Lyon concours	146
	The first review	150
	Awarding the prize	154
	Announcing the results	157
	Educational travel at a dead end?	161
6	Inventing school trips? Revolutionary programmes of collective educational travel	171
	'Holiday' trips and educational walks	172
	Travel as republican practice par excellence : the Portiez bill (1794)	177
	Émiles on the road	181
	The first school trip? The trips of the pupils of the 'pensionnat' of the École centrale de l'Eure	186
	Conclusion	202
	Bibliography	211
	Index	227