

Contents

Acknowledgments	xi
1 Introduction	1
I What this book is about and what it is not about	1
II Two beginnings, one door	3
III Leibenstein's writings, 1950–66	5
IV Empirical studies on X-efficiency	7
2 Two beginnings	9
I The door	9
II Homo economicus	17
III Behavioral economics. What is it?	19
IV Final comments on this chapter and looking ahead to Chapter 3	24
3 The “Big 3.” Simon, Katona, Leibenstein	25
I Herbert A. Simon	25
II George Katona	30
III Harvey Leibenstein	38
IV Behavioral economics or speculation?	45
V Final comments on this chapter, and looking ahead to Chapter 4	45
4 It didn't just happen overnight	47
I Gabriel Tarde	48
II James March	50
III Richard Nelson and Sidney Winter	52
IV Kenneth Boulding	53
V James Duesenberry	54
VI Reinhard Selten	57
VII G.L.S. Shackle. The paradox of rationality	59
VIII Tibor Scitovsky	61
IX Final comments on this chapter, and looking ahead to chapters	64
Appendix: Full rationality and the new behavioral economics	64
5 Leibenstein before X-efficiency theory	71
I Efficiency wages	72
II Similarities in Akerlof's and Leibenstein's behavioral economics	77
III Social preferences. The psychology and sociology of demand	79

IV	The nature of human knowledge	82
V	Organizational analysis and economic theory	83
VI	Final comments on Chapter 6, and looking ahead to Chapter 6	94
6	X-efficiency. An intervening variable	95
I	In the beginning...	95
II	X vs. allocative efficiency	97
III	Final comments on this chapter, and looking ahead to Chapter 7	108
	Appendix: Dual-selves, herding, gift exchange, framing and the new behavioral economics	109
7	Empirical research on XE: c.1967–1990	117
I	Some issues surrounding X-efficiency	117
II	Early studies on X-efficiency using questionnaires and/or interviews	121
III	Early studies not using questionnaires and/or interviews	123
IV	Ownership form	124
V	Protection	126
VI	Level of competition	127
VII	Government (regulations)	129
VIII	Management	133
IX	Final comments on this chapter, and looking ahead to Chapter 8	135
8	XE among US financial institutions: c.1991–2017	137
I	Parametric and non-parametric approaches	137
II	Frontier analysis	140
III	Bank studies	141
IV	Non-bank studies	151
V	Final comments on this chapter, and looking ahead to Chapter 9	155
9	XE among financial firms in Asia: c.1991–2017	157
I	China	157
II	Korea and Japan	165
III	Other Asian nations	166
IV	Final comments on this chapter, and looking ahead to Chapter 10	169
10	XE among Asian non-financial institutions: c.1991–2017	171
I	China	171
II	Taiwan	171
III	India	176
IV	Indonesia	177
V	Final comments on this chapter, and looking ahead to Chapters 11 and 12	177

11	XE in Europe: c.1991–2017	179
I	Eastern Europe and post-communist	179
II	EU members	183
III	Individual nations	184
12	XE in Australia and New Zealand, Latin America, the Middle East, Africa, and the world: c.1991–2017	189
I	XE in Australia and New Zealand	189
II	XE in Latin America	192
III	XE in Middle East and Africa	194
13	Conclusions	203
I	Two beginnings and the door	203
II	Homo economicus	203
III	Overlaps between the first and other generations	204
IV	X-efficiency theory	204
V	Leibenstein and the empirical studies of X-efficiency theory	205
	References	207
	Index	233