Preface	xiii
Chapter 1: Methodological Preliminaries	1
1.0. Introduction	1
1.1. Functional Grammar	2
1.2. The functional paradigm	4
1.2. Some aspects of verbal interaction	8
1.2.1. A model of verbal interaction	8
1.2.2. The structure of pragmatic information	9
1.2.3. Mutual knowledge	10
1.2.4. Intention, meaning, and interpretation	11
1.3. Standards of adequacy	12
1.3.1. Pragmatic adequacy	12
1.3.2. Psychological adequacy	13
1.3.3. Typological adequacy	14
1.3.4. The relations between the standards	14
1.4. Abstractness, concreteness, and applicability	15
1.5. Take languages seriously	16
1.6. Constraints on the power of FG	17
1.6.1. Avoid transformations	17
1.6.2. Avoid filtering devices	20
1.6.3. Avoid abstract semantic predicates	21
1.6.4. Motivating these constraints	22
Chapter 2: Some Basic Concepts of Linguistic Theory	23
2.0. Introduction	23
2.1. The importance of functional notions	23
2.2. Linguistic universals	25
2.3. Hierarchies	27
2.4. Priorities	32
2.4.1. An example	35
2.4.2. On explaining priorities	36

2.5.	Markedness	38
2.5.1.	Marked construction types	38
2.5.2.	Markedness in oppositions	40
2.5.3.	Markedness shift	41
Chapter 3:	Preview of Functional Grammar	45
3.0.	Introduction	45
3.1.	The structure of the clause	45
3.2.	The structure of FG	51
3.2.1.	Notes on the mode of presentation	51
3.2.2.	Outline of the FG model	53
3.3.	The structure of this work	64
Chapter 4:	The Nuclear Predication	67
4.0.	Introduction	67
4.1.	The nuclear predication	67
4.2.	Predicate frames	68
4.3.	Arguments vs. satellites	72
4.4.	Selection restrictions	76
4.5.	Meaning postulates and meaning definitions	81
4.6.	Idioms	86
Chapter 5:	States of Affairs and Semantic Functions	89
5.0.	Introduction	89
5.1.	States of affairs, predicates, and “Modes of Action” ..	90
5.2.	Semantic parameters for a typology of SoAs	90
5.2.1.	± Dynamic	91
5.2.2.	± Telic	92
5.2.3.	± Momentaneous	94
5.2.4.	The interrelations between [dyn], [tel], and [mom]	95
5.2.5.	± Control	96
5.2.6.	± Experience	98
5.3.	Nuclear semantic functions	100
5.3.0.	Introduction	100
5.3.1.	First argument semantic functions	101
5.3.2.	Other nuclear semantic functions	102
5.4.	Predication, State of Affairs, and “Reality”	107
Chapter 6:	On the Function and Structure of Terms	111
6.0.	Introduction	111
6.1.	The nature of reference	111
6.1.1.	Entities are mental constructs	113

6.1.2.	Two ways of referring	114
6.2.	The structure of terms	115
6.3.	A typology of entities	119
6.3.1.	The insufficiency of set theory	119
6.3.2.	Types of entity	120
6.3.3.	Do we need individuals ?	122
6.3.4.	Ensemble nouns	123
6.4.	Types of restrictors	125
6.4.1.	Some properties of underlying term structure	126
6.4.2.	Different surface forms of restrictors	129
6.5.	The representation of personal pronouns	130
6.6.	Types of relations between terms and predicate	132
Chapter 7:	Term Operators	137
7.0.	Introduction	137
7.1.	Operators in FG	137
7.2.	Definiteness and indefiniteness	139
7.3.	Specificity and Genericity	143
7.4.	Demonstratives	146
7.5.	Quantifying operators	149
7.5.1.	Quantifiers	149
7.5.1.1.	General principles of term quantification	150
7.5.1.2.	Three types of ensemble	151
7.5.1.3.	A typology of quantifiers	152
7.5.1.4.	Universal quantification	155
7.5.2.	Ordinalators	157
7.5.3.	Mensural and sortal classifiers	158
7.6.	Term operators for grammatical operations	160
Chapter 8:	Non-verbal Predicates	161
8.0.	Introduction	161
8.1.	Categorical differences between predicates	161
8.2.	Adjectival predicates	165
8.3.	Copula support	165
8.4.	Nominal predicates	169
8.5.	Adpositional predicates	173
8.6.	Possessive predicates	174
8.7.	Locative and existential constructions	176
8.7.1.	Initial analysis	176
8.7.2.	The role of pragmatic functions	178
8.8.	Differences in argument type	180

Chapter 9:	Nuclear, Core, and Extended Predication	183
9.0.	Introduction	183
9.1.	From nuclear to core predication	184
9.1.1.	Predicate operators	184
9.1.2.	Aspectuality	186
9.1.2.1.	Perfective and Imperfective	187
9.1.2.2.	Phasal aspect distinctions	189
9.1.3.	Level 1 satellites	192
9.2.	From core to extended predication	198
9.2.1.	Variables for states of affairs	198
9.2.2.	Predication operators	202
9.2.2.1.	Tense operators	202
9.2.2.2.	Quantificational aspect operators	204
9.2.2.3.	Objective mood operators and Polarity	204
9.2.3.	Level 2 satellites	206
Chapter 10:	Perspectivizing the State of Affairs: Subject and Object Assignment	209
10.0.	Introduction	209
10.1.	Some differences with other approaches	210
10.2.	The FG interpretation of Subject and Object	212
10.3.	Subject/Object vs. semantic and pragmatic functions	216
10.4.	Accessibility to Subj/Obj assignment	219
10.4.1.	Criteria for the relevance of Subject and Object	219
10.4.2.	The Semantic Function Hierarchy	223
Chapter 11:	Reconsidering the SFH; Raising; Ergativity	229
11.0.	Introduction	229
11.1.	Subj/Obj assignment and the layering of the clause	229
11.2.	Subj/Obj assignment to Loc and Temp	230
11.3.	First and second argument as targets for Subj	232
11.4.	A multi-factor approach to Subj/Obj assignment	235
11.5.	Raising phenomena	237
11.6.	Markedness shift	239
11.6.1.	Markedness shift and Obj assignment	239
11.6.2.	Markedness shift and Subj assignment: ergativity	242
Chapter 12:	Predication, Proposition, Clause	247
12.0.	Introduction	247
12.1.	States of Affairs and Possible Facts	248

12.2.	From predication to proposition	250
12.2.1.	The propositional content variable	250
12.2.2.	Proposition operators	251
12.2.3.	Attitudinal satellites	252
12.3.	From proposition to clause	254
12.3.1.	The illocutionary variable	254
12.3.2.	Illocutionary operators	255
12.3.3.	Illocutionary satellites	258
12.4.	The representation of underlying clause structure	261
Chapter 13:	Pragmatic Functions	263
13.0.	Introduction	263
13.1.	Extra-clausal and intra-clausal pragmatic functions . .	264
13.2.	Clause-internal pragmatic functions	265
13.3.	Topic and topicality	266
13.3.1.	Introducing a NewTop	268
13.3.2.	Maintaining a D-Topic	270
13.3.3.	Given Topic and Sub-Topic	275
13.3.4.	Resuming a Given Topic	276
13.4.	Focus and focality	277
13.4.1.	Question-Answer pairs	279
13.4.2.	Different types of Focus	281
13.4.2.1.	Differences of scope	281
13.4.2.2.	Differences in communicative point	282
13.5.	The role of Focus in a grammar	285
Chapter 14:	Expression Rules	289
14.0.	Introduction	289
14.1.	Interaction between different types of expression rules	290
14.2.	Productivity; rules and regularities	291
14.3.	Lexical priority	294
14.4.	The representation of non-productive forms	294
14.5.	The place of morphology in a Functional Grammar . .	297
14.6.	General format of form-determining expression rules . .	299
14.6.1.	Changes effected by expression rules	300
14.6.2.	Types of μ -operators	300
14.6.3.	Types of operanda	303
14.6.4.	Simultaneous application of μ -operators	306
14.6.5.	The sequential application of μ -operators	306

Chapter 15: The Operation of Expression Rules	309
15.0. Introduction	309
15.1. Expression rules affecting the form of terms	309
15.1.1. Semantic, syntactic, and pragmatic functions	309
15.1.2. Case marking	312
15.1.3. The expression of term operators	315
15.1.4. Agreement within terms	316
15.2. Expression rules affecting the predicate	320
15.2.1. Voice distinctions	320
15.2.2. The effects of π -operators	323
15.2.3. The expression of polarity	327
15.2.4. The expression of illocutionary operators	328
15.3. Agreement at the clause level	330
Chapter 16: General Principles of Constituent Ordering	333
16.0. Introduction	333
16.1. Some preliminary remarks	334
16.2. Towards a multifunctional theory of constituent ordering	336
16.3. Some auxiliary notions	338
16.4. Constituent ordering principles	340
16.4.1. General principles	340
16.4.2. Specific principles	345
Chapter 17: Constituent Ordering: Problems and Complications	357
17.0. Introduction	357
17.1. Object-Subject languages	357
17.2. Special positions	359
17.2.1. The uses of PI	359
17.2.2. Special positions other than P1	363
17.3. Constituent ordering within term phrases	365
17.3.1. Applicability of the ordering principles to the term domain	366
17.3.2. Hawkins' facts and their explanation	368
17.3.3. Discussion of Hawkins' explanation	370
17.3.4. Some conclusions	372
17.4. Displacement phenomena	373
17.5. Interactions between the ordering principles	375
17.5.1. Preposings in Postfield languages	376
17.5.2. Postposings in Prefield languages	377

Chapter 18: Prosodic Features	379
18.0. Introduction	379
18.1. Prosodic contours	379
18.1.1. Tone	380
18.1.2. Accent	381
18.1.3. Intonation	384
18.1.3. The form of prosodic contours	384
18.2. The functions of prosody	386
18.2.1. Distinctive function	387
18.2.2. Characteristic function	388
18.2.3. Predicate formation (derivation and composition)	389
18.2.4. Inflectional expression rules	389
18.2.5. Pragmatic functions	390
18.2.5.1. Topicality	391
18.2.5.2. Focality	392
18.2.6. Articulation of the clause	395
18.2.7. Illocutionary operators	396
18.2.8. Conventionalized pragmatic effects	397
18.2.9. Emotional expression	397
18.3. Generating prosodic contours	398
