

CONTENTS

---

	List of illustrations	page ix
	Preface	xiii
1	Demythologizing literacy	i
2	Theories of literacy and mind from Levy-Bruhl to Scribner and Cole	20
3	Literacy and the conceptual revolutions of Classical Greece and Renaissance Europe	45
4	What writing represents: a revisionist history of writing	65
5	What writing doesn't represent: how texts are to be taken	91
6	The problem of interpretation: the recovery of communicative intention	115
7	A history of reading: from the spirit of the text to the intentions of the author	143
8	Reading the Book of Nature: the conceptual origins of early modern science	160
9	A history of written discourse: from mnemonics to representations	179
10	Representing the world in maps, diagrams, formulas, pictures and texts	195

5.2	POGO Copyright, 1993, OGPI. Los Angeles Times Syndicate (reprinted with permission)	95
6.1	PEANUTS (reprinted by permission of UFS, Inc.)	125
6.2	SALLY FORTH (reprinted with special permission of North America Syndicate)	132
10.1	Etching by Saendredam of the 'false picture' (reprinted by permission of Gemeentearchief Haarlem)	203
10.2	Mappa mundi, in a manuscript of Marco Polo (reprinted by permission of The Royal Library, National Library of Sweden)	206
10.3	The west coast of Africa, in a MS portolan chart by G. Benincasa, 1468 (reprinted by permission of the British Library)	208
10.4	Pictorial representation of the Carolinian voyager's articulation of the moving spatial frames of islands and stars during an (imaginary) voyage (from Oatley, 1977; reprinted by permission of Cambridge University Press)	214
10.5	Modern map of Arctic region compared to Pukerluk map drawn for Rasmussen (from Canadian Geographic, 1991, 3(4), p. 63; reprinted by permission of The Royal Canadian Geographical Society)	217
10.6	Drawing after Galileo. The formulaic expression $D = v \times t$ is a modern convenience. Galileo would have objected to	219

---

	the multiplication of incommensurables, preferring to express the relation in terms of ratios (Ellen Olson, artist)
10.7	Drawing after Galileo (Ellen Olson, artist)	220
10.8	Linozostis, a medicinal herb as depicted in Dioscorides' sixth-century herbal	224
10.9	The Bishop Fish, as depicted in Gesner's sixteenth-century History of animals	226
10.10	Student representation of a generic flower	227