

Contents

List of Tables	xi
Abbreviations	xiii
Introduction	1
Methodology and Definitions	5
Methodology: Army Sizes	9
The Near East in the Summer of 1099	13
1. Frankish Expansion	20
The First Decades: the Kingdom of Jerusalem under Godfrey and Baldwin I, 1099–1118	20
The First Decades: the County of Tripoli, 1099–1117	28
The First Decades: the Principality of Antioch, 1099–1115	35
The First Decades: the County of Edessa, 1099–1115	43
2. Friends and Foes (1099–1129)	50
The Fatimids 1099–1123	50
The Turks: Aleppo and Damascus	62
The Armenian Lords	78
3. Aleppo and Damascus (1117–29): the Challenge of the Big Cities	88
Aleppo	88
Damascus	96
4. The Evolving Balance of Power (1130s–48)	99
John II Comnenus and the Atabeg Zangi	99
Why did the Franks' Territorial Expansion Stop?	106
The Siege of Damascus: 1148	112
5. The Rise of Nur al-Din 1149–74	122
Military Activity 1146–74: the North	122
Military Activity 1149–74: the South	131
Frankish Manpower and Mercenaries	143
The Size of Armies	153
6. Saladin and the Battle of Hattin	163
Kurdish Involvement in the Wars of the Near East 1099–1187	163
Saladin and the Crusader States 1174–87	168
Rethinking Hattin 1187	184
Fighting Pitched Battles	189

Theoretical Approaches and Models Towards Warfare and Alliances in the Medieval Near East	203
The Strategic Role of Castles in Turkish and Frankish Campaigning	210
7. Innovation and Cross-cultural Exchange in the Evolution of Near Eastern Warfare	218
The Combatants	220
Feigning Flight	229
Learning to Defeat Frankish Heavy Cavalry	233
Identifying the Cross-cultural Transmission of Ideas and Tactics	237
Conclusion
Why did the Crusader States Lose the Contest for the Near East?	242
Decadent 'Pullani'?	242
Problems with Offensive Operations in Syria	245
Speed	251
Integrating Crusaders	255
Synthesis	258
Bibliography	265
Index	283