

Table of contents

List of figures	XIII
Preface	XV
Acknowledgments	XVII
CHAPTER 1
What is language change?	1
1. Introduction	1
2. Characteristics of language	4
2.1 The human element	4
2.2 Arbitrariness	4
2.3 Creativity	5
2.4 Physicality	6
3. Change	6
3.1 Life cycles	6
3.2 What changes?	9
4. Evidence of change	11
5. Cognitive Grammar as a framework	15
6. Book overview	17
7. Conclusion	20
Exercises	20
For further investigation	22
CHAPTER 2
Studying change	23
1. Overview	23
2. Uniformitarianism	24
3. Coincidence and universals	24
3.1 Pure coincidence	25
3.2 Universals	26
3.2.1 Absolute universals	26
3.2.2 Relative universals	28
4. Genetic relationships and families	29
4.1 The Genealogical (Tree) model	29
4.2 The wave model	32
4.3 Contemporary approaches	34
5. Contact among languages	35
5.1 Kinds of contact	35

- 5.2 Stratal influence 38
- 5.3 Areal influence 41
- 5.4 Pidgins and creoles 42
- 6. Conclusion 43
- Exercises 44
- For further investigation 45

CHAPTER 3

Lexical change

47

- 1. Overview 47
- 2. Etymology 47
 - 2.1 Basic vocabulary 48
 - 2.2 Coinage 48
 - 2.3 Lexical loss 52
- 3. The nature of meaning 53
- 4. More general trends 58
 - 4.1 Generalization (widening) 58
 - 4.2 Narrowing 58
 - 4.3 Meliorization 59
 - 4.4 Pejoration 60
 - 4.5 Shift 62
 - 4.6 Metaphor 63
 - 4.7 Metonymy 66
- 5. Wider tendencies and causation 67
 - 5.1 Root, epistemic, and speech act meaning 68
- 6. Conclusion 70
- Exercises 71
- For further investigation 71

CHAPTER 4

Phonetic change

73

- 1. Introduction 73
 - 1.1 The scope of phonetics 73
- 2. A note on conventions and features 76
- 3. Unconditioned change 77
 - 3.1 Simple changes 77
 - 3.2 Complex changes: Chain shifts 78
 - 3.3 Conclusion 80
- 4. Conditioned change 81
 - 4.1 Positional conditioning 81
 - 4.2 Conditioning by surrounding elements 84
 - 4.2.1 Segmental influence 84

4.2.2	Suprasegmental influence	89
5.	The wider context	91
5.1	Imitation and borrowing	92
5.2	Fortitions and lenitions	92
6.	Consciousness of change	93
7.	Conclusion	93
	Exercises	94
	For further investigation	95

CHAPTER 5

Phonological change

97

1.	Introduction	97
1.1	Phonetics and phonology	97
1.2	The phoneme	98
1.3	Formalism	100
1.4	Summary	101
2.	Processes of phonemic change	101
2.1	Merger	101
2.2	Split	103
2.2.1	Allophonic split	104
2.2.2	The creation of phonemes: Phonologization	105
3.	Phonological change as recategorization	107
3.1	Individual changes	107
3.2	Phonemic inventories	110
3.2.1	Patterns	110
3.2.2	Features	113
4.	Actuation and expansion of use	115
4.1	Actuation	115
4.2	Expansion of use	116
5.	Conclusion	117
	Exercises	117
	For further investigation	118

CHAPTER 6

Morphological change

119

1.	Introduction	119
1.1	Morphology and the morpheme	119
2.	Word-level morphology	120
2.1	Coinage through affixes	121
2.2	Reanalysis across boundaries	122
3.	Free and bound morphemes	123
3.1	Grammaticalization	124

3.2	New free morphemes from bound	126
4.	Analogical change	128
4.1	Examples	129
4.1.1	English plurals	129
4.1.2	English verbs	130
4.2	Kuryłowicz's paper on analogy	131
5.	Paradigmatic and other systematic change	135
5.1	Series and semantically related words	135
5.2	Paradigmatic changes	137
5.3	A return to Sturtevant's paradox	138
6.	Concluding comments	140
	Exercises	140
	For further investigation	141

CHAPTER 7

Syntactic change

143

1.	Introduction	143
1.1	The nature of syntax	143
1.2	Diachronic syntax	144
1.2.1	Structural approaches and feasibility	144
1.2.2	Reconstruction	144
1.2.3	What to do?	145
1.2.4	Rate of change	149
2.	Word order	151
2.1	Simple word order change	151
2.2	Universals and universal tendencies	152
2.3	Iconicity	156
2.4	The analytic-synthetic cycle	159
3.	Reanalysis and grammaticalization	161
3.1	The Latin and Romance passive	162
3.2	Complementation and subordinate clauses	163
4.	Conclusions	165
	Exercises	166
	For further investigation	167

CHAPTER 8

Actuation and spread

169

1.	Introduction	169
2.	Actuation	170
3.	Spread	172
3.1	Kinds of spread	172
3.2	The role of variation	173

3.2.1	Weinreich, Labov, and Herzog (1968)	173
3.2.2	Social marking	175
3.2.3	Martha's Vineyard	177
3.2.4	Other determiners	178
4.	Lexical diffusion	179
5.	The role of frequency and cognitive salience	180
6.	When can we say that change has emerged from spread?	181
7.	Conclusion	182
	Exercises	183
	For further investigation	183

CHAPTER 9

Methodology

185

1.	Introduction: Theory and method	185
2.	Text-based data	186
2.1	Philology	187
2.1.1	Definitions	187
2.1.2	Challenges	187
2.2	Corpus data and mining	190
3.	Reconstruction	192
3.1	Underlying assumptions	192
3.1.1	Relationships among languages	192
3.1.2	The ultimate single form	192
3.1.3	The regularity hypothesis	193
3.1.4	Occam's Razor	193
3.1.5	Hypothesis construction	193
3.2	Comparative reconstruction	194
3.2.1	Language family data	194
3.2.2	Correspondence sets	196
3.2.3	Testing the reconstruction	198
3.2.4	Limitations	199
3.3	Phylogenesis	199
3.4	Internal reconstruction	200
3.4.1	Some examples	201
3.4.2	Limitations	202
3.5	Syntactic reconstruction	203
3.6	Combining methods	204
3.7	Shortcomings and challenges in reconstruction	205
4.	Philology and reconstruction compared and combined	206
5.	Conclusion	208
	Exercises	209
	For further investigation	211

CHAPTER 10

Causation, prediction, and final remarks	213
1. Introduction	213
1.1 Generalizations about change and cognition	213
2. The potential for prediction	216
2.1 Aspects of change favoring prediction	217
2.1.1 Drift and typological co-occurrence	217
2.1.2 Typology, grammaticalization, and cyclical change	218
2.2 Processes which do not allow prediction	219
2.2.1 Emergence	219
2.2.2 Competition	219
2.3 Factors of change for further exploration	220
2.3.1 Genetic affiliation	220
2.3.2 Contact	221
2.3.3 The role of frequency	221
2.4 Summary	222
3. Fundamental causation	222
3.1 Biological causation	223
3.2 Social causation	223
3.3 Cognitive causation	224
3.3.1 Phonological patterns	224
3.3.2 Grammatical patterns	225
3.3.3 Humboldt's universal	226
3.3.4 Summary: Cognitive functioning	227
4. Language as a system	228
Exercises	229
For further investigation	230
References	231
Index	237