

CONTENTS

PREFACE	v
CONTRIBUTORS	xxv
MAPS AND FIGURES	xxvii
ILLUSTRATIONS	xxviii
ABBREVIATIONS AND CONVENTIONS	xxxiv
INTRODUCTION: IRELAND, 1870-1921	by R. V. Comerford xliii
I ISAAC BUTT AND THE HOME RULE PARTY, 1870-77	by R. V. Comerford
Fenian amnesty campaign; the Devon commission	1
Peace preservation and 'Westmeath' acts, 1870-71	2
Butt's federal scheme; protestant support	3
Home rulers in by-elections, 1870-71	4
I.R.B. activists and electoral politics	6
Tensions within I.R.B.	7
Ambiguity of home rule success: Kerry and Galway by-elections, February 1872	8
'Clerical influence' and politics	9
Gladstone's university bill, 1873	10
Irish liberals defect to home rule	10
Democratic character of Home Rule League	12
General election, 1874: effects of ballot act	13
Lack of factors unifying home rulers	14
Butt's balancing act	15
Tenant farmers' clubs	16
No widespread enthusiasm for home rule	17
John O'Connor Power and County Mayo	17
John Mitchel stands for Tipperary, 1874 and 1875	18
Parnell returned for Meath, 1875; an 'advanced' group forms	19
The I.R.B.'s response to change: 'intransigents', 'activists', and John Devoy	20
Clan na Gael and Fenian Brotherhood, 1875-7	21
Home rulers in the commons	23
Parliamentary obstruction; Parnell becomes leader of obstructionists	25
II THE LAND WAR AND THE POLITICS OF DISTRESS, 1877-82	by R. V. Comerford
Gladstone in Ireland, 1877	26
The Churchills woo the Irish: tory education legislation; release of fenian prisoners	27
Agricultural depression begins, 1877	28
Davitt joins supreme council, 1878	29
Devoy, the I.R.B., and prospects of crisis	30

Devoy's offer to support Parnell, 24 October 1878	31
Fenian reactions to the 'new departure'	31
Irishtown meeting, 20 April 1879	33
Westport meeting, 8 June; Archbishop MacHale's opposition	33
National Land League of Mayo formed, 16 August	35
Irish National Land League formed, 21 October	35
Government measures against distress	36
The duchess of Marlborough and the Mansion House fund	37
Parnell in the U.S.A., January–March 1880; funds for relief or agitation?	37
General election, 1880: Parnellite group reinforced	39
House of lords rejects compensation for disturbance bill	41
Land league spreads beyond west, autumn 1880	42
Ulster	42
Social basis of league support	42
Demands and tactics vary with circumstances	43
Social ostracism: the 'boycott'	44
Sources of violence	45
The swing to coercion, October 1880–March 1881	46
Land act, August 1881: acceptance or continued agitation?	47
The 'No rent' manifesto; the league suppressed, October 1881; the Ladies' Land League; Captain Moonlight	48
The Kilmainham treaty and Phoenix Park murders, May 1882	49
Clan na Gael, O'Donovan Rossa, and bombing attacks	50
'Crimes act' and arrears act, July–August 1882	50
Davitt and land nationalisation; emigration and social costs	51
Political consequences	51
III THE PARNELL ERA, 1883–91	by R. V. Comerford
Building the new party	53
Salaries for M.P.s; the party pledge; electoral conventions	53
Cooperation with clergy; electoral reform	54
Leadership	55
Deeper involvement in British politics	56
The O'Sheas	56
Chamberlain and the 'central board' scheme, 1885	57
Fall of Gladstone's government: Churchill and the tories	58
Carnarvon as lord lieutenant	59
Tory legislation for Ireland	59
Gladstone's feelers, late 1885	60
British parties encourage hopes of constitutional developments	60
General election, 1885	61
Tory and liberal reactions	62
Fall of tory government; Gladstone's initiatives	62
Bill for the better government of Ireland; land bill	63
General election, 1886: liberals defeated	64
Irish-American contributions, 1883–90	65
Religious and political polarisation	66

Protestant objections; rise of unionism	67
The land question resurgent, 1885: tory measures and the 'plan of campaign', 1886	69
Strategy and support; papal rescript, 1888	70
Arthur Balfour as chief secretary	71
Crimes act and executive action: Mitchelstown and New Tipperary	72
Land act, 1887	72
Land purchase act, 1891; the congested districts board	73
The 'union of hearts'	74
The Times articles: 'Parnellism and crime'	74
The O'Shea connection; the divorce case	75
Political consequences: Gladstone's statement; Parnell's manifesto	76
Committee Room 15; the stance of the bishops	77
Negotiations at Boulogne	78
The struggle in Ireland	78
Parnell dies, 6 October 1891	80
Parnell as a political leader	80
IV THE AFTERMATH OF PARNELL, 1891-1903 by F. S. L. Lyons
The historical pendulum	81
The Irish party's impotence after 1891: isolation of Parnellites	82
Factions among anti-Parnellites	83
The National Press dispute; Healy expelled; Dillon as leader	83
'Dillonites' and 'Healyites'	84
Dillon preserves 'unity and discipline'	85
Diminishing weight at Westminster; liberal alliance atrophies	85
Tory measures; land purchase act, 1891	86
Congested districts board	87
Moves to improve agriculture: Sir Horace Plunkett and cooperation	87
Plunkett and politics: the 'recess committee'	88
Childers commission report, 1896	89
Local government act, 1898	89
Department of agriculture and technical instruction	90
Tenurial revolution, technical conservatism	91
O'Brien and the United Irish League	91
O'Brien and Dillon; moves towards reconciliation	92
Redmond becomes chairman, February 1900	93
Healy isolated	94
U.I.L. organisation	94
Shawe-Taylor's land conference	95
Wyndham's land act, 1903: climax of 'constructive unionism'	96
Hopes of reconciliation process blasted	97
Nationalist misgivings	98
O'Brien resigns from party	98
Social and economic change	99
Boom in industry and agriculture	99
Prosperity of Belfast	100
Slums, disease, and drunkenness	100

Economic dominance of Britain	101
Dunraven and the Irish Reform Association; devolution proposals	102
MacDonnell's role; Wyndham resigns; developments in unionism	102
The Gaelic League; Douglas Hyde	103
Political effects	105
Arthur Griffith: United Irishman , Cumann na nGaedheal, and the 'Hungarian policy'	105
Literary renaissance; conflict with Irish-Ireland objectives	107
The labour movement	108
Connolly and the Irish Socialist Republican Party	109
The primacy of political action?	109
V THE WATERSHED, 1903-7	by F. S. L. Lyons
Events of 1903-7	111
Liberals return to office, 1906	111
Three liberal attitudes to home rule	112
Campbell-Bannerman accepts 'step by step' approach	113
Irish council bill, 1907	113
Divisions within the Irish party	114
From National Council to Sinn Féin, 1905-8	115
Sinn Féin enters electoral politics	116
Death of John O'Leary and return of Thomas Clarke	117
Unionist divisions: Sloan, Crawford, and the Magheramorne manifesto	117
The Ne temere decree, 1907	119
The 'Playboy' riots: politics are not dead	119
Joyce and the 'centre of paralysis'	121
Larkin and the Belfast strikes and lockouts	121
VI THE DEVELOPING CRISIS, 1907-14	by F. S. L. Lyons
Birrell as chief secretary	123
Irish universities act, 1908	124
Other liberal reforms, 1906-9	124
Healy and O'Brien reconciled with Redmond	125
O'Brien founds the All-for-Ireland League	126
Lloyd George's budget, 1909; parliament dissolved	126
Liberals dependent on Redmond	126
Second general election, 1910; Redmond's hand strengthened; parliament act, 1911	127
Southern and Ulster unionisms	128
Carson and Bonar Law	129
Why unionists would not have home rule	130
Third home rule bill, April 1912	131
Agar-Robartes's amendment: the idea of excluding counties	132
Bonar Law at Blenheim, July 1912	133
The strange illness of liberal England	133
The legitimacy of home rule	134
The Solemn League and Covenant; the Ulster Volunteer Force	135
Redmond and the problem of Ulster	135

Revival of republicanism	136
MacNeill and the founding of the Irish Volunteers	136
Larkin and militant labour	138
Strikes and lockouts in Dublin, 1913-14	139
White, O'Casey, and the Irish Citizen Army	139
Carson refuses county option, March 1914	140
The Curragh incident	140
Arms for Ulster Volunteers landed, 24-5 April 1914	141
Arms for Irish Volunteers landed, 26 July 1914; Bachelor's Walk massacre	142
Redmond gains control of Volunteers	143
Royal assent to home rule bill, 18 September 1914	144
VII IRELAND IN 1914	by L. P. Curtis, Jr
Varieties of crisis	145
A priest-ridden population?	145
Birth, death, and marriage rates	146
Emigration: the profile of emigrants in 1914	147
Agricultural holdings	148
Extension of urban culture; decline in number of Irish-speakers	149
Urban, 'semi-urban', and rural areas: problems of definition	149
Occupations: problems of classification; changes, 1901-11	151
Women	154
Occupations and religious allegiance; Belfast	154
Imports and exports	156
Celibacy	157
Land tenure: decline of landlordism	157
Land purchase	158
Agrarian agitation	160
Credit: moneylenders, banks, and cooperatives	161
The position of the landlord class	162
Agricultural production: crops; labour	164
Women in rural society	165
Women in public affairs: feminism and suffrage	166
The civil service: costs of administration	168
The constabulary: crime; political functions	169
Poverty and progress	171
The problems of Dublin	171
Labour disputes	172
Intellectual life	173
Material improvement	174
Political activity	174
Volunteer forces	175
Divisions among unionists and nationalists	176
Ulster forces the pace	177
Religious demography and social background in Ulster	178
The anticlimax of home rule	179
The I.R.B. and plans for insurrection	180

Conflict of cultures: Irish-Ireland	181
Pearse, Griffith, Connolly	182
Inquiries	183
Impact of European war	184
Social background of political alignment	185
1916 prisoners: a social analysis	186
Stirring the dragons	187
Life beyond politics	188
VIII THE REVOLUTION IN TRAIN, 1914-16	by F. S. L. Lyons
Redmond pledges Ireland's support for the allies	189
Irish enlistment; official obstacles	190
Redmond's Woodenbridge speech; the Volunteers split	190
Preparations for a rising	191
Pearse, MacDonagh, and Plunkett: the religion of nationalism and the blood sacrifice	192
Inner circles	196
Connolly: the possibility of independent action averted	197
MacNeill's memorandum, February 1916	199
Casement, Devoy, and the search for German aid	200
The Aud mission	201
Effects on the preparations for a rising	203
The 'Castle document'; MacNeill's actions	204
Volunteer mobilisation: orders and counterorders	204
IX THE RISING AND AFTER	by F. S. L. Lyons
Government inaction: wartime prosperity	207
Absence of widespread disaffection	207
The Irish party and extremism; party declines to join coalition	208
Forebodings of a rising; action postponed	209
The rising begins	211
A strategy of fixed positions	212
The republic proclaimed	213
Impact of superior force: the material cost	214
Civilian deaths: murder of Sheehy-Skeffington; North King Street	215
Capitulation: the human cost	217
Martial law and the alienation of public opinion	217
Arrests	217
Executions	218
Crisis for constitutional politics; Redmond and Dillon	219
Lloyd George proposes home rule with temporary partition	220
Southern unionists block proposals; Redmond withdraws	222
X THE NEW NATIONALISM, 1916-18	by F. S. L. Lyons
Disarray among Irish party, I.R.B., and Sinn Féin	224
Public opinion	225
Irish party loses by-elections to Sinn Féin	226

Effects of American entry into the war	228
The Irish Convention	228
Redmond dies, 6 March 1918; Dillon inherits a desperate situation	229
Sinn Féin transformed	229
The I.R.B. and Collins	231
Sinn Féin árd-fhéis, October 1917; opts for a republic	232
Command of the Volunteers	233
The conscription crisis, spring 1918	234
Griffith stands for Cavan East	236
The 'German plot'; organisations sympathetic to Sinn Féin banned	236
Republican leadership consolidated	237
General election, 1918; Sinn Féin's mandate	238
XI THE WAR OF INDEPENDENCE, 1919-21	by F. S. L. Lyons
First Dáil Éireann meets, January 1919: constitution; declaration of independence; Democratic Programme	240
A new set of ministers, April 1919	242
Castle authority eroded: local councils; Sinn Féin courts	243
Shootings of constabulary and attacks on barracks begin	244
Recruitment of Black and Tans, 1920; Auxiliary Division, R.I.C.	244
The Volunteers become the I.R.A.; strength; political control	245
Outrage and reprisal	247
Lloyd George and the government of Ireland act, 1920	247
Second dáil, 1921; drift towards civil war in Ulster	248
Repression and guerrilla warfare	249
Restoration of order in Ireland act, 1920	249
Steps towards cease-fire, early 1921; de Valera returns from U.S.A.	250
King's speech, 22 June 1921; Lloyd George offers conference; truce, 11 July 1921	251
First negotiations	252
Delegation to London, October 1921	253
Ambiguous instructions	254
British and Irish representatives	254
The main issues: strategic facilities, constitutional status, partition	255
Ulster: the boundary commission proposal	255
Renewed problem of constitutional status	257
A revised oath	258
Lloyd George's ultimatum; the treaty signed	258
XII ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL HISTORY, 1850-1921	by H. D. Gribbon
The famine: watershed or irrelevance?	260
Immediate aftermath: government aid reduced	261
The outlook in 1850	261
Land tenure: the encumbered estates acts	262
Decline in rural population; effects of labour shortage	262
Shift from tillage to pasture and livestock	263
Prices of agricultural produce; harvests	264
Costs and capital	266

Competition from imports	267
Land act, 1870: tenant right; improvements; the Bright clauses	268
Rent levels	270
Depression begins, 1879-82	270
Prices, 1881-1914	271
Livestock numbers and exports	272
Land tenure and land management	274
Labourers: wages, housing, and employment	276
Crops and cultivation methods	278
Livestock improvements and food processing	279
The cooperative movement	281
The department of agriculture and technical instruction	282
The congested districts board	283
Fishing; tillage; rural industry; communications	284
Land purchase; loans	285
Fisheries: government aid; foreign competition	287
Industrial development: post-famine decline	292
Expansion: linen	292
Shipbuilding	294
Engineering; brewing and distilling	294
Cotton and wool	295
Paper; boots and shoes; furniture	296
Mining	297
Irish industrial output in context	298
Tobacco; lace and crochet	302
Shirt-making	305
Biscuits; other industries	308
Communications: railway capital, costs, and management	309
Roads: motors, bicycles, and tramways	311
Railway expansion: the 'golden years'	312
Canals; shipping	314
Retail prices and living costs: foodstuffs	314
Fuel and accommodation	318
Wages: labourers, semi-skilled, and skilled workers	318
Women	322
Finance: banks	322
Taxation and revenue	327
Public finance and the Irish economy	329
Social changes: the gentry	331
Widening prosperity	332
Occupations	333
Expansion of the middle class	334
Housing and public health	335
Trade unions	338
Effect of developments outside Ireland	339
Gas, electricity, telephones	340
Rural society	341

Social change reviewed	342
Effects of war	342
Agriculture	343
Industry; munitions	346
Employment	348
Effects of peace: trade	348
Investment and savings	349
Railways; industry	350
Employment of women; welfare	350
Problems of the Irish economy	351
Expenses of administration	353
Loss of population: emigration, recruitment, tuberculosis	354
Appendix
1 Net assessments to tax under schedules D and E	355
2 Housing, 1851-1911	356
XIII LITERATURE IN ENGLISH, 1891-1921	by Vivian Mercier
Literary revival and political revolution	357
Rejection of the bourgeois	358
Life follows art	359
Dublin as intellectual centre	359
Periodicals and other publishing	360
The Abbey Theatre	362
Martyn, Moore, and the Irish Theatre	363
Class and denominational division avoided	363
Gaelic mythology: Yeats; Standish James O'Grady	364
The figure of Cú Chulainn	365
Break with colonial writing	366
Folk speech and literary language	367
Differences between writer and audience	368
Social origins of writers: the gentry	369
The evangelical tradition	369
Realism and northern protestants	370
Catholic middle-class writers	371
Poets: generalisations break down	371
The theatre: art and nationality	372
After Synge: a more heterogeneous Abbey	374
Poetry and politics: events of 1912-13	375
Pearse; the impact of 1916	377
The novel: Stephens, Moore, O'Donovan	378
O'Kelly, Bullock, MacGill, Reid	380
Joyce	381
XIV IRISH LANGUAGE AND LITERATURE, 1845-1921	by Brian Ó Cuív
Official attitudes to Irish	385
Irish-speaking as shown in the census returns of 1851-1911	385

Effects of the revival and of Irish in schools	389
Government antipathy to or disregard of Irish	391
The courts	391
Maynooth; the churches and Irish	392
Social pressures towards English	394
The national system of education	394
Irish in intermediate schools	396
Scholarly activity: learned societies	396
The universities; European interest in Celtic studies	397
Beginnings of revivalism	397
The Society for the Preservation of the Irish Language, 1876; the Gaelic Union, 1880	399
Hyde	400
The Gaelic League, 1893	403
Social and political aspects	403
The campaign for Irish in education	404
The national university question	407
Impact in politics	408
Casement, Pearse, MacNeill	410
The 1915 conference	411
Sinn Féin, Dáil Éireann, and independence	412
Manuscripts and collections	414
Linguistic studies	416
The School of Irish Learning; Ériu	417
Vernacular Irish and oral literature	418
Writing in contemporary Irish	419
Ua Laoghaire	419
Short stories: Ó Seaghdha, Ó Conaire, Pearse	420
Breathnach, Ó Sióchfhradha	421
Ó Murchadha, Ó Criomthainn	422
An Ridireacht Liteardha; An Fáinne	423
Poetry: last stages of a tradition	424
New generation of Munster poets	424
Béaslaí, Pearse	425
Songs	426
Drama: translations and original plays	427
Teaching aids: O'Growney, Dinneen	427
Problems: dialect, orthography, spelling	428
Appendix
1 Irish-speakers, by counties and provinces, 1851-1921	431
2 Irish-speakers, by baronies, 1891	433
3 District electoral divisions, 1911	435

XV VISUAL ARTS AND SOCIETY, 1850-1900 by Cyril Barrett and Jeanne Sheehy

The stimulus of mid-century exhibitions: Dargan and the founding of the national gallery, 1854

Constitution; acquisitions	437
Attendances	438
Public and private patronage	439
Art unions and popular interest in art	440
Cork exhibition, 1852; Dublin exhibition, 1853	441
Later exhibitions, 1861-83	442
The Royal Hibernian Academy; problems	443
The schools of art and design	444
Government schools of design set up, 1849	444
Dublin	444
Cork	446
Belfast	447
George Sharp; Limerick; 'schools of practical art'	448
Drawing societies and art clubs	449
Leading painters: Maclise, Danby, Mulready	449
Burton, Crowley, Rothwell	451
Nicholl, Beechey, Catterson-Smith	452
Mulcahy, Doyle, Nicol, Hayes, William Osborne	453
Irish painters on the Continent	454
John Butler Yeats	456
Purser; Walter Osborne	456
Kavanagh, O'Brien, O'Connor, Lavery	457
Sculptors: Hogan, Foley, MacDowell	458
Architecture: a variety of styles	460
Churches; A. W. N. Pugin, J. J. McCarthy, and the rise of Gothic	460
British architects in Ireland	463
Secular Gothic: Woodward & Deane	463
Public and private buildings: classical style	464
Lanyon, Lynn, Barre	465
Engineers: Turner, Macneill, Mallet, Stoney	466
Workhouses, asylums, colleges	467
Private houses	468
Decoration: terracotta; Irish motifs	469
Applied arts: lacemaking, textiles	470
Pottery, glass	471
Furniture	471
Stained glass	473
XVI VISUAL ARTS AND SOCIETY, 1900-21	by Cyril Barrett and Jeanne Sheehy
Revival and decline: the Royal Hibernian Academy	475
The 1905 inquiry; the academy's defence, 1907; inaction	476
The Dublin Metropolitan School of Art	478
The department of agriculture and technical instruction: applied arts instruction and teacher training	479
Lane and the movement for a gallery of modern art	480
The problem of a site	480

The dispute with London; the 1915 codicil	483
The national gallery	484
Painters: John Butler Yeats, Somerville, A E, Purser	485
The Continent: the Henrys, Leech, Swanzy, O'Conor	486
London: Jack B. Yeats, Orpen, Keating	486
Sculptors	488
The arts and crafts movement in Ireland	488
Stained glass	490
An Túr Gloine	491
Clarke, Healy, Geddes, McGoldrick	492
Architecture: declining demand for building	493
Belfast as the capital of Irish protestantism	493
Dublin	495
Exhibition buildings; smaller institutional buildings	496
Neo-Georgian and classical; innovations; private housing	497
Community amenities	498
Churches	498
XVII MUSIC AND SOCIETY, 1850-1921	by Aloys Fleischmann
Mid-century recovery; wider social involvement in Dublin music	500
The Antient Concerts Society and Philharmonic Society	500
Large displays: the exhibitions of 1853 and 1865	501
Concerts; composers; church music	501
Belfast: the Music Hall and Ulster Hall	502
Cork	503
Opera	504
Military bands	505
Civilian bands	505
Traditional music: the countryside	506
Growing urban interest; collections	507
Patriotic songs; broadsheet ballads	507
Traditional forms and functions	508
Music teaching; the Irish Academy of Music	508
The later nineteenth century: Dublin choral and orchestral societies	509
Belfast	510
Cork	511
Opera	512
Music in education	513
Municipal schools	513
Professional organisations	514
The influence of nationalism	514
Féis Ceoil and Oireachtas founded, 1897	515
The early twentieth century: Dublin	515
Esposito; O'Brien; McCormack	515
Popular concerts; cinemas and recording	516
Effects of war	518
Postwar music	518

Belfast; Cork	518
Opera	519
Music in education	520
Nationalism: an attempted renaissance in Irish opera	520
Folk music: organisations and collections	521
Fife and drum bands	522
Bands and nationalist activism	522
XVIII PRE-UNIVERSITY EDUCATION, 1870–1922 by D. H. Akenson
Intermediate schools	523
Gladstone, Hicks-Beach, and Keenan	524
Board created and endowed, 1885	524
Denominational character; educational standards	525
Payment by results: the effects	525
Recommendations of the 1898 commission	526
Inspection versus examination: government accepts inspection, 1908	527
The per capita system as a basis for grants	528
The act of 1913 and committee of 1918: a legacy	528
Technical training	529
The department of agriculture and technical instruction rescues technical education	530
Council of agriculture and board of technical instruction	531
Educational success of the department	531
Financial and political success	531
National schools	532
The Powis commission, 1868–70	532
Payment by results introduced	533
Effects of treasury control	533
The Belmore commission, 1896–8	534
Starkie as resident commissioner	535
The ‘revised programme’, 1900	535
Bilingual programme, 1904	535
Compulsory attendance act, 1892	536
School size	536
Failure to extend civic control	537
Insulation of national, technical, and intermediate systems	538
XIX HIGHER EDUCATION, 1793–1908 by Susan Parkes
‘Secular’ and ‘religious’ concepts of education	539
Wider curricula and access to higher education	539
Trinity College, Dublin	540
St Patrick’s College, Maynooth	541
Attempts to establish a presbyterian university	542
A secular university: the London model	543
The Irish colleges bill, 1845: disputed options	543
Wyse and proposed reform of Irish education, 1835–8	544
The bill’s terms	545
Catholic and presbyterian reactions	546

Graham's 'memoranda of subjects': courses established	548
Constitution of the queen's university	549
Kane and Queen's College, Cork	550
Belfast	550
The Kildare commission, 1857-8	551
Movement for a catholic university: Newman and Cullen	552
Establishment; problems	553
Attempts to assimilate queen's and catholic universities	555
Mayo's proposals, 1868	556
The Royal College of Science	556
Gladstone's university bill, 1873	557
Fawcett's act abolishes religious tests in Trinity	558
Trinity in mid-century	558
Tory legislation: intermediate education, 1878; the royal university, 1879	560
The queen's colleges commission, 1884	562
Catholic proposals: Walsh, Delany, O'Dwyer	563
The Robertson commission, 1901-3; the Dunraven scheme, 1904	564
The Fry commission, 1906-7; Bryce and Birrell	565
The Irish universities act, 1908	566
The question of compulsory Irish	568
Extended scope of the national university	568
Queen's University, Belfast	569
Trinity	569
Three secular universities	570

XX ADMINISTRATION AND THE PUBLIC SERVICES, 1870-1921

by R. B. McDowell

Entry to civil service by open competitive examination, 1870	571
The tripartite system in Ireland	571
The Irish Civil Service Committee; parity with English salaries, 1873; recruitment, 1874	572
Effects of expanding administration	573
The church temporalities commission	574
Administration of property	575
Land tenure	576
Accounts	576
The local government board act, 1872: public health and relief	577
The judicature act, 1877	578
Tory legislation: the intermediate education board	579
Relief of distress: 1879-82	580
The poor relief act, 1886; relief in the west, 1890-91	582
The land commission	583
Land purchase	586
The congested districts board	587
The department of agriculture and technical instruction	589
Local government reform	590
The 1892 bill	591

The 1898 act	592
The local government board in action	593
Need for administrative reform	594
Effects of war	595
Pressure for retrenchment	595
Employment in wartime; refugees	597
Food supply	598
U.K. ministries in Ireland	598
Peacetime reorganisation	599
Health	600
Education	600
The war of independence	601
The government of Ireland act, 1920	601
Administrative responses to civil war	602
The Warren Fisher inquiry	603
The restoration of order act	603
Beginnings of a Northern Ireland administration	604
Officials in the search for a political solution	604
Administrative transition	605
XXI EMIGRATION, 1871-1921
	by David Fitzpatrick
Emigration as a structural element of post-famine Ireland	606
Irish emigration rates the highest in Europe	607
Destinations of emigrants: primacy of the United States	608
Choice influenced by previous migrants	609
Sources of emigration: primacy of Connacht	610
Rural poverty	610
Origins and destinations	611
Profiles of emigrants: males and females	612
Predominance of emigrants aged 20-24	613
'Labourers' and farmers' children	613
Other occupations	614
Literacy, education, and emigration	615
Shipping and fares	617
Government assistance	618
Private sponsorship; catholic colonisation	619
Tuke and Vere Foster	620
'American money' and prepaid passages	622
Effects of emigration on Ireland	624
'American money' as a conservative influence	624
Economic effects	625
Children and fertility	626
'The deplorable tide'	627
Social and political stability	629
The first world war	631
Emigration and the war of independence	632
Reverse migration	633

The returned emigrant in Irish society	634
Emigration made easier	637
Appendix
1 Rates of out-migration from Ireland, 1871-1911	638
2 Nationality of emigrants from U.K. ports by destination, 1853-1910	639
3 Distribution of Irish-born outside their native counties, 1871-1921	640
4 Destinations outside Europe of Irish emigrants, 1876-1914	641
5 Emigration of natives of Ireland by quinquennia, 1871-1914	642
6 Cohort depletion and literacy for Ireland and Mayo, 1871-1911	643
7 Volume of small remittances to the United Kingdom, 1871-1915	644
8 'Irish' immigration as percentage of emigration by destination, 1895-1913	645
9 Female percentage of Irish migration by destination, 1895-1913	646
10 'Permanent' migration between Ireland and extra-European countries, 1912-13	647
XXII THE IRISH IN BRITAIN, 1871-1921	by David Fitzpatrick
Alienating aspects of Britain; lack of an immigrant community	653
Relative decline of the Irish-born population in Britain	654
Continuing immigration	654
More older and more male immigrants	655
Distribution	656
Disappearance of 'Irishtowns'	656
Pauperism	657
Migratory labour	658
Areas of origin	659
Occupations and earnings	660
Permanent settlers: areas of origin	661
Occupations: lack of upward mobility	662
Effects of the first world war: recruitment	664
Munitions work	665
Peace: the status quo ante returns	666
British hostility	666
Social alienation: Irish offenders in Britain	667
Continuing deprivation and grievance	670
Catholicism	671
Attendance rates	671
Intermarriage; marriage and fertility	672
Social action; education	672
The church and politics	673
Fenianism	675
Gaelic revival	676
Constitutional politics: home rule	677
Membership; funds	679
Electoral influence	681
The rise of labour	682
Local government	683
The events of 1916-21: direct action	684

Propaganda and pressure groups	685
The Irish Self-determination League of Great Britain	685
'A curious middle place'	689
Appendix
1 Irish-born population of Great Britain, 1871-1921	690
2 Irish-born population of British towns, 1871-1921	691
3 Irish seasonal migration, 1880-1915	692
4 Demography of Mayo and Donegal, c.1881-91	694
5 Irish-born workers as percentages of certain occupations, Scotland (1911)	695
6 Irish-born offenders in Britain, 1861-1911	697
7 Male prisoners admitted to Barlinnie prison, Glasgow, 1882-3	698

XXIII THE IRISH IN AUSTRALIA AND NEW ZEALAND, 1870-1990 by Patrick O'Farrell

Problems of assessing 'Irishness'	703
The Irish on the land and in the labour movement	704
Assimilation and acceptance	706
Catholic leaders	707
Views of the empire; images of the Irish	708
Irish organisations	709
Atrophy of cultural traditions	710
St Patrick's day	710
Home rule: commitment and division	711
Primacy of Australian concerns	713
Attempts to harmonise Irishness and Australia	713
The 1916 rising and after: the Irish National Association	715
Resentment at the challenge to Irish standing in Australia	716
The conscription referenda, 1916-17	718
Lack of response to republican causes	719
New Zealand	720
Disillusionment	721
The divorce of Australian catholicism from Irishness	721
Concern for Irish political problems dwindles	722
Immigration; diplomatic relations	723
The end of Irish Australia	724

XXIV THE REMAKING OF IRISH-AMERICA, 1845-80

by David Noel Doyle

The remaking of Irish-America, 1845-80	725
Emigration massively enlarged; predominantly catholic	725
Triumph of nationalist ideology; industrialisation	726
British North America: older patterns persist	726
The wider importance of a coherent Irish-America	726
The differences of Irish-Canada	727
Cultural and institutional patterns of Irish-America	728
Established foundations	728
Demographic trends	728

Charity	730
American receptivity	731
Exile seen as ill fortune	731
Good fortune: expanding territory; expanding employment; politics	731
Who were the emigrants?	732
Changing sources of the flow of emigration	733
Munster and Connacht predominate	734
Ulster	735
Irish-America becomes catholic by definition	736
Irish-speakers	736
Munster and south Leinster	737
Emigrants from western Ireland	738
Outer Ulster	738
Small farmers and labourers	739
Regional divisions delay the emergence of a common Irish-America	740
Urbanisation: Irish-America opts for the urban future	740
Increasing urban concentration in the late nineteenth century	742
Patterns of settlement	743
East versus mid-west	744
Concentration in small factory cities	745
Patterns consolidated by 1870	746
The Irish in the cities: mortality rates	746
Urban growth in America; urban decline in Ireland	749
Improved quality of life?	749
Labouring	750
Skilled work	753
Householding and home-making	755
Poverty and social attitudes: conservatism of catholic bishops; Irish-American laity	756
The catholic church in America	758
The role of non-Irish catholics	759
Irish-America consolidates its catholicism	761
 BIBLIOGRAPHY	 by Charles Benson and Helen F. Mulvey 764
 INDEX	 881