Preface	11
0 INTRODUCTION	13
1 OBJECTIVES, APPROACH AND METHOD OF THE PROJECT	15
2 THE INTERNATIONAL ECONOMIC AND TECHNOLOGICAL BACKGROUND	20
2.1 International economic performance	20
2.1.1 The present situation	21
2.1.2 Short term trends	23
2.2 International competition in microelectronics innovations	27
2.3 Favourable technological development lines	34
3 EUROPE	40
3.1 Diagnostics of the European situation	40
3.2 R&D strategies	49
3.2.1 R&D expenditures	49
3.2.2 Specific R&D areas	54
3.3 Manpower strategies	58
3.3.1 Diagnostics of qualified skill shortage	59
3.3.2 Reasons for skill shortage	63
3.3.3 Reactions to skill shortage	65
3.4 Market and production strategies	69
3.4.1 Customer ICs	69
3.4.2 The standard IC market	74
3.4.3 IC manufacturing capability	75
3.4.4 Testing and yield	80
3.4.5 Application strategies	81

3.5	International technology transfer strategies	81
3.5.1	Overview of transfer mechanisms	86
3.5.2	Technology import by multinational subsidiaries	90
3.5.3	Technology import by licence agreement and cooperation	96
3.5.4	Conclusions on Europe's technology transfer strategies	100
3.5.4.1	Overseas technology import	100
3.5.4.2	Intra-European technology transfer	102
3.5.4.3	Technology transfer to developing countries	104
3.6	Industry's relationship to universities and unions	108
3.7	Government policies	111
3.7.1	R&D policies	111
3.7.2	Trade and tariff policies	118
4	UNITED STATES	124
4.1	Structure of the U.S. microelectronics industry	124
4.2	R&D strategies	126
4.3	Manpower strategies and relations to universities	128
4.4	Market and production strategies	135
4.5	International technology transfer strategies	137
4.6	U.S. Government policies	139
5	JAPAN	144
5.1	R&D strategies	144
5.2	Manpower strategies	148
5.3	Market and production strategies	149
5.4	International technology transfer strategies	156
5.5	Government policies	163

6	CONCLUSION: Europe needs international cooperation, reorganisation and integration	167
6.1	International cooperation	167
6.2	Reorganization and integration	170
6.3	Problems and illustrations of integrative mechanisms	177
6.4	Europe's potential for integration	182
7	RECOMMENDATIONS	190
