CHAPTER 1
Introduction	1
1.1 Word order and information structure	1
1.2 Dislocations: A structural paradox	6
1.3 Organization of the book	13
CHAPTER 2
A tale of two clauses	17
2.1 The biclausal analysis	17
2.1.1 D as a fragment	18
2.1.2 Specifying coordination	23
2.2 Deriving the properties	25
2.2.1 D is internal to the HC	25
2.2.2 D is external to the HC	30
2.3 Against a D-K structural link	34
2.3.1 RD as a doubling phenomenon	34
2.3.2 Right dislocation isn't resumption	45
2.3.3 Summary	46
2.4 On extraction from D	46
2.4.1 López (2009) and Villalba (2000)	47
2.4.2 Samek-Lodovici (2015)	50
2.5 Implications for prosody	54
2.6 Concluding remarks	58
CHAPTER 3
Previous accounts	61
3.1 D is in situ	62
3.1.1 Right dislocation as LF movement	62
3.1.2 Problems	64
3.2 Peripheral approaches	68

3.2.1	Movement vs base generation	68
3.2.2	Remnant movement	70
3.3	Middle field approaches	73
3.3.1	The low periphery	73
3.4	The right roof constraint	77
3.5	Left-right asymmetries	80
3.5.1	Asymmetry 1: Extraction	80
3.5.2	Asymmetry 2: ECP effects in French	82
3.5.3	Asymmetry 3: Aux-to-comp in Italian	83
3.5.4	Asymmetry 4: Obviation effects	85
3.5.5	Asymmetry 5: Reconstruction and principle C	89
3.5.6	Asymmetry 6: Variable binding	92
3.5.7	Interim summary	94
3.6	D is external to the clause	94
3.7	Summary	97

CHAPTER 4

Locality without movement	99
4.1	On movement and ellipsis	100
4.1.1	The (syntactic) licensing of ellipsis	100
4.1.2	Challenges for MADA	103
4.1.3	Ellipsis as radical deaccentuation	105
4.2	Islands	109
4.2.1	The Dutch data	110
4.2.2	The Romance data	113
4.3	The minimal coordination hypothesis	116
4.3.1	Dutch (multiple) extraposition	117
4.3.2	Interim summary	123
4.3.3	The MCH in Romance	124
4.3.4	Where does the MCH derive from?	128
4.4	Multiple dislocations	130
4.4.1	Clause-mate dislocations	131
4.4.2	Dislocation from different clauses	133
4.4.3	Recursive dislocations	135
4.4.4	Wrapping up	136
4.5	D does not move	137
4.5.1	Lack of motivation	137
4.5.2	Scope	138
4.5.3	A note on P-stranding	141
4.6	Conclusion	142

CHAPTER 5
Other right peripheral fragments	145
5.1 Introduction	145
5.1.1 The right periphery of the clause	145
5.1.2 A structural paradox	146
5.1.3 The biclausal solution	149
5.2 RD as a (force-)dependent RPF	150
5.2.1 Two types of RPF	150
5.2.2 RDs vs AT/SQs	151
5.2.3 A proposal	156
5.3 In situ fragments	158
5.3.1 Islands	160
5.3.2 Complementizers and sentential RPF	166
5.3.3 Scope	169
5.3.4 Interim summary	172
5.4 Predicative afterthoughts	172
5.4.1 A copular source	172
5.4.2 Properties of D	175
5.4.3 Movement of D	180
5.4.4 A brief note on PredNPs	182
5.5 Other right peripheral fragments	186
5.6 Conclusion	187
CHAPTER 6
Concluding remarks	189
