

CONTENTS

Preface xi

Acknowledgments xvii

Notes on Abbreviations, Key Terms, and Translations xxiii

1	Why Confucianism? Which Confucianism?	1
	Has History Ended? Message from a Rising China	1
	Which Confucianism?	3
	The Philosophical Approach to Early Confucianism	5
	Can Early Confucian Texts Be Read Philosophically?	9
	How to Read Early Confucian Texts Philosophically	13
	Early Confucianism as a Modern Political Philosophy	19
2	Confucianism on Political Legitimacy: For the People, of the People, but Not by the People	32
	Confucian Equality	32
	Confucian View of Political Legitimacy: Of the People, for the People . . .	34
	. . . But Not by the People	43
	The Confucian Middle Way: Between Equality and Hierarchy, and between Mobility and Stability	47
3	A Confucian Hybrid Regime as an Answer to Democratic Problems	52
	Four Problems with Democracy	52
	Nonmeritocratic Solutions and Their Fundamental Limit	58
	The Confucian Hybrid Regime	67

4	The Superiority of the Confucian Hybrid Regime Defended	83
	Internal Challenges to the Superiority of the Confucian Hybrid Regime	83
	Incompatible with Liberal Democracy?	97
5	Compassion as the New Social Glue in the Society of Strangers	110
	Introducing Humaneness and Compassion	110
	Compassion as a Modern Virtue	114
	The Cultivation of Compassion: From What Is Near to the "Transcendent" and the "Eternal"	125
	The Hierarchy of Universal Care	133
	Effectiveness of Compassion	135
6	Conflict in the Expansion of Care: The Private versus the Public	138
	The Issue of the Private versus the Public	138
	Early Confucians' Solutions	140
	Han Fei Zi's Challenges	149
	An Alternative Model in the Republic	154
	Comparisons between the Two Models	159
	A Confucian Criticism of the Contemporary Evasion of Virtue	165
	A Confucian Argument for Gender Equality	171
7	Tian Xia: A Confucian Model of National Identity and International Relations	175
	Patriotism Justified and Restrained	175
	The Civilized and Barbaric Distinction and a Confucian World Order	180
	Is Nation-State the Only Path to Modernity?	187
	Confucian Model versus Nation-State Model	191
	Confucian Model versus Cosmopolitan Model	198
	Treatments of Some Practical Problems in China	207

8	Humane Responsibility Overrides Sovereignty: A Confucian Theory of Just War	214
	A City on a Hill: "Isolationism" as International Intervention	214
	The Strength of the State and the Justice of War	217
	The Self-Preservation of a Humane but Small State	220
	The Duty to Protect by a Humane and Powerful State	223
	A Mencian Theory of Just War	226
	Compared with "Human Rights Override Sovereignty" and the Responsibility to Protect	230
	Problems with Mencius's Theory	234
9	A Confucian Theory of Rights	240
	Four Camps on the Compatibility between Confucianism and Liberal Democracy	240
	Problems with Democratic Ideas as the Metaphysical Foundation of Liberal Democracy	245
	A Revised Rawlsian Answer	249
	Confucian Rights	257
	An Example: Confucian Animal Rights	268
	Compatibility between a State's Promotion of Virtue and Liberalism	278
	Postscript	285
	Environmental and Technological Challenges: A Synthetic Answer	285
	Realizing the Confucian Alternatives?	288

References 291

Index 305