

CONTENTS

Acknowledgments	IX
Chapter 1. The Development of a Researchable Question . . .	1
1.1 Introduction	1
1.2 Group determination of individual behavior	4
1.3 Problems of strategy	10
1.4 The development of strategy	16
Chapter 2. The Conflict Model	24
2.1 Introduction	24
2.2 The Conflict Model	25
2.3 Properties of the Model	29
2.4 The Model as a tool	41
Chapter 3. Relative Status and Conformity: Experiment 11 . . .	44
3.1 Introduction	44
3.2 Objectives of Experiment 11	49
3.3 The design of Experiment 11	51
3.4 Experimental procedures	56
3.5 Results of Experiment 11	64
Chapter 4. The Cohen-Lee Model	67
4.1 Introduction	67
4.2 The Cohen-Lee model	68
4.3 Estimation of the parameters of the Cohen-Lee model	70
Chapter 5. Fit of the Cohen-Lee Model to Experiment 11 . . .	82
5.1 Introduction	82
5.2 Observed quantities from response data	83
5.3 Detailed analysis of the [HL] condition	84
5.4 Detailed analysis of the [LH] condition of Experiment 11	88

5.5	Plots of the proportion of correct responses given trial by trial	91
5.6	Initial evaluation of the Cohen-Lee model	97
Chapter 6. Fit of the Cohen-Lee Model to Experiments 1, 2, 3, 20, and 21
6.1	Introduction	99
6.2	Experiments 1, 2, and 3	99
6.3	Experiments 20 and 21	105
6.4	Evaluation of the Cohen-Lee model	113
Chapter 7. The Use of the Cohen-Lee Model as a Tool in the Construction of Theory
7.1	Introduction	114
7.2	Demonstrations of the substantive utility of the model	114
7.3	Fit of the model	115
7.4	Employing the model to distinguish between experimental treatments	117
7.5	The generation of new questions	124
7.6	Homans and Hollander revisited	140
Chapter 8. An Overview of This Project
8.1	Introduction	147
8.2	Major substantive findings of our studies	147
8.3	What can we now say about the questions posed in Chapter 1?	150
8.4	Our research strategy: A review and a forward look	156
8.5	The utility of the Asch situation	159
8.6	The use of our model for the analysis of experiments	164
8.7	The model as an emerging theory of conflict resolution	167
Appendix A. Instructions to Subjects and to Experimenter for Experiment 11
Appendix B. Kemeny-Shell Estimation Procedure for the Conflict Model
Appendix C. The Data
References		