

Contents

Acknowledgements	vii
Introduction: Anxious Flesh	1
A Story, a Cartography, a Tour – Nomadic Transpositions, or How I Learned to Love New Materialism – Dramatic and Post-Dramatic Theatre – Concepts and Approaches: The Rift – Old and New Materialism – The Politicisation of Biological Life – Fascist Immunitarianism – ‘Domestic’ Drama, or the Politicisation of the Private – Sexuality between Biology and Culture – Theatre and the Family – Why Theatre? Or, between Molar Structures and Molecular Practices – Notes
Part I: Copenhagen and Paris, circa 1889: Economies of Excess
1. Posthumanism and Gender, or the Fall Back into Nature	57
Degeneration – The Biopolitics of Gender – Managing Bodies – Threats to Bourgeois Ideology – Libidinal Economies – The Economy of Exchange/The Parasite – Castration, or the Modern Gap – The Flesh – Notes
2. Death and Community, or Metaphors and Materiality	92
Parasites, Semen and Blood – ‘Die passive Materie’ – Of Male Mothers and Quaggas – Animals – The Struggle for Existence – Family Configurations, or Primordial and Individual Debt – Fraternal Oedipus – Fetishism, or the Autonomy of Objects – Homosexuality as a ‘Species’ – Notes
Part II: Munich and Paris, 1918–1943: Encounters with Fascism
3. Bare Life, or Becoming-Animal	129
The ‘Totalitarian’ Brecht – Border Violations – Animals, Plants and Water – Against Naturalism and Expressionism – Society without Parents – Zōē, or beyond the Symbolic – Towards

Non-Anthropocentric Theatre – The God of Excess – Homoeroticism – Instrumentalisation – Nature AND History – The Fascist Brecht? – Notes
4. Flies vs. the Fetishisation of Consciousness	170
Contagion – En-soi and pour-soi , or zōē and bíos – Gender Binarism – Rotting Flesh – Libidinal Drives – Nausea, Mothers and Flies – Slime – Antithetical Rigidity – Notes
5. Artaud and the Plague: A Posthumanist Theatre?	204
The Theatre and Culture – The Theatre and the Plague – Posthumanist Tragedy – The Mise-en-Scène – Artaud and Brecht – Artaud, Posthumanist? – Fusions – Notes
6. Where Does the Body End? Artaud’s Materialsymbolic Theatre	235
Les Cenci , an Event – The Loss of Cognitive Control – ‘We Are the Storm’ – ‘The Sufferings of an Imminent Birth’ – Burnt Flesh – Notes
Conclusion	280
Openings, or Where Do We Go from Here? – Notes
Bibliography	289
Index	312