

Contents

| | |
|---|-----|
| List of figures | 7 |
| Acknowledgments | 9 |
| Introduction | 11 |
| Chapter One: Shaping subjectivity: the experience of female embodiment in William Blake's The Book of Thel and Visions of the Daughters of Albion | 17 |
| Essentialism, embodiment and gender | 17 |
| The dilemmas of adolescence: becoming a woman in The Book of Thel | 20 |
| The practice of femininity: Visions of the Daughters of Albion | 38 |
| Chapter Two: Exuberant excess: John Keats's "Isabella; or, the Pot of Basil" | 63 |
| Head in a pot and purple fantasies – the romantic grotesque | 63 |
| Unclaimed experience – trauma and madness in Keats's poem | 73 |
| From the Romantic to modern aesthetic – visual renderings of "Isabella; or, the Pot of Basil" | 83 |
| Chapter Three: Between life and art: Alfred Tennyson's "The Lady of Shalott" | 109 |
| Gender, art and sexual politics in "The Lady of Shalott" | 109 |
| "The Lady of Shalott" on page and canvas | 129 |
| Inside the tower | 130 |
| Catastrophe commences | 136 |
| Outside the tower | 142 |
| "The Lady of Shalott" as a twentieth-century picture book | 152 |

| | |
|---|-----|
| Chapter Four: Female empowerment/female submission. | |
| Christina Rossetti's "Goblin Market" | 163 |
| Rupturing boundaries: grotesque incongruity, female agency and excessive appetite in "Goblin Market" | 163 |
| Ruskin, the grotesque and "Goblin Market" | 176 |
| The ending – contradictions resolved or reinstated? | 180 |
| Illustrating "Goblin Market": indulgence, violence and aestheticism . . | 185 |
| Early days: a fairy story of sin or pleasure? | 185 |
| At the start of the twentieth century: "Goblin Market" as a cautionary tale | 189 |
| "Goblin Market" for adult readers | 197 |
| Instead of Conclusions | 207 |
| Bibliography | 211 |
| Index | 227 |