THE Introduction concerning the Causes of Atheism. Page 1

PROP. I. That Something has existed from Eternity. p. 18
Of the Difficulty of Conceiving Eternity. 19
That Difficulties of Apprehension on the one side, ought not to be opposed to evident Demonstration on the other: as in our Conceptions of Eternity, Infinity, of the Divisibility of Quantity, &c. 20

Prop. II. That there has existed from Eternity some one Immutable and Independent Being. p. 23
Of the Absolute Impossibility of an Eternal Succession of Dependent Beings, existing without any Original Independent Cause at all. 24

Prop. III. That that Immutable and Independent Being, which has existed from from Eternity, without any External Cause of its Existence, must be Self-existent, that is, Necessarily-Existing. p. 27

Of the true Idea of Self-Existence : That it is the Idea of a Being, the Supposition of whose Non-Existence is an express Contradiction. 30

That every Man may be more certain of the Being of a Supreme Independent Cause, than he can be of any thing else besides his own Existence. 35

Of the Idea of God including Self-Existence. 37

That the Material World cannot possibly be the First, Original and Independent Being. 42

Mr. Toland's pernicious Opinion of Motion being essential to Matter, confuted. 46

A Confutation of Spinoza's Opinion concerning one only Substance. 50

Concerning the Eternity of the World : And that the Opinion of the best Antient Philosophers in that Matter, did not at all favour the Sentiments of our Modern Atheists. 57

The Contents.

Prop IV. What the Substance and Essence of that Being, which is Self-Existent or Necessarily-Existing, is ; we have no Idea, neither is it possible for us in any measure to comprehend it. p. 74

Of the Weakness of those, who have imagined Infinite Space to be a just Representation or Idea of the Essence of the Supreme Cause. 78

Of the Vanity of explaining things by such School Terms, as have really no Signification at all. 80

Prop. V. That though the Substance or Essence of the Self-Existent Being, is it self absolutely incomprehensible to us : Yet many of the Essential Attributes of his Nature are strictly Demonstrable, as well as his Existence. As in the First Place, that He must of Necessity be Eternal. p. 81

Of the manner of our Conceiving the Eternity of God, with respect to Succession. 82, 84

Prop. VI. That the Self-Existent Being, must of Necessity be Infinite and Omnipresent. p. 86

Of

The Contents.

*Of the Simplicity, Unchangeableness,
Incorruptibility, &c. of his Nature.* 89
Of the Manner of our Conceiving the Immensify of God. 91

Prop. VII. That the Self-Existent Being must of Necessity be but One. p. 93

Of the Trinity of Persons, in Unity of Nature. 95
Of the Absolute Impossibility of two different Self-Existent Independent Principles, such as God and Matter. 96
*The Error of Spinoza, concerning
One Uniform Substance.* 96

Prop. VIII. That the Self-Existent and Original Cause of all Things, must be an Intelligent Being. p. 101

This, the main Question between us and the Atheists. ibid.

Not easily proved a priori. 102

*But demonstrably proved a posteriori,
from the Variety and Degrees of Perfection in Things, and the Order of Causes and Effects.* 103

From the Intelligence that Created Beings are confessedly indued with. 106

That

The Contents.

That, if Intelligence be a real distinct Quality or Perfection ; and not a mere Effect or Composition of Unintelligent Figure and Motion ; then Beings indued with Intelligence, can never possibly have arisen purely out of that which it self had no such Perfection.

108

That Intelligence is such a real distinct Perfection ; and not possible to be a mere Effect or Composition of Unintelligent Figure and Motion.

113

Mr. Hobbs forced to recur to that prodigiously absurd Opinion, that all Matter, as Matter, is endued with Thought.

117

The Proposition demonstrated further, from the Beauty, Order and Final Causes of Things.

118

From the Original of Motion.

122

That the Material World cannot possibly have been Self-Existent.

125

Prop. IX. That the Self-Existent and Original Cause of all Things, is not a Necessary Agent, but a Being indued with Liberty and Choice. p. 126

This Proposition a Necessary Consequent of the foregoing.

127

Proved.

Also from Final Causes.	140
And from the Finiteness of Created Beings.	142
And from the Impossibility of an Infinite Succession of Causes.	144
That Liberty is not in it self an impossible and contradictory Notion.	148
 Prop. X. That the Self-Existent Being, the Supreme Cause of all Things, must of Necessity have Infinite Power.	 p. 150
 Of working Contradictions, and Natural or Moral Evils.	 154
Of the Power of Creating Matter.	156
Of the Power of Creating Immaterial Cogitative Substances, and those indued with Liberty of Will or Choice.	159
Of the Immateriality of Humane Souls.	165
That the Power of Perception is not confined to Bodily Senses.	167

The Contents.

- Of the Possibility of induing a Creature with Freedom of Will.* 178
- An answer to Spinoza's and Mr. Hobbs's Arguments against the Possibility of Liberty.* 181
- That there must be somewhere a Beginning of Operation.* 183
- That Thinking and Willing, neither are,
nor can possibly be, Qualities or Affections of Matter.* 188
- That, supposing they were Affections of Matter, yet even that most absurd
Supposition would not at all affect the Question about the Possibility of Liberty.* 200
- A shameful Fallacy of Mr. Hobbs and his Followers arguing; who, when they would prove the Soul to be mere Matter, then they suppose Matter to be a Substance capable, not only of Figure and Motion, but also of other unknown Properties: And when they would prove the Will and all other Operations of the Soul to be Necessary, then they devest Matter of all its Unknown
Properties, and make it Mere Solidity indued only with Figure and Motion
again.* 201

The Contents.

Of the Necessity of the Will's being determined by the last Judgment of the Understanding. 206

Of the Certainty of Divine Fore-knowledge, not repugnant to the Liberty of Mens Actions. 209

Of the Original of Evil. 218

Prop. XI. That the Supreme Cause and Author of all things, must of Necessity be Infinitely Wise. p. 221

Proved a Priori. 222

And a Posteriori, from the Wisdom and Perfection of the Works of God, evidenced more illustriously in the late Discoveries in Astronomy and Natural Philosophy. 225

Prop. XII. That the Supreme Cause and Author of all Things, must of Necessity be a Being of infinite Goodness, Justice and Truth, and all other Moral Perfections ; such as become the Supreme Governour and Judge of the World. p. 233

Of Providence. 241

The Necessity of God's Moral Attributes, consistent with perfect Liberty. 243
Of

The Contents.

Of the Necessity of God's doing always what is Best and Fittest in the whole.

247

Of the Impossibility of his doing Evil.

250

That Liberty is not in it self an Imperfection, but a Perfection.

252

Of the highest moral Perfection of Rational Creatures, not excluding Natural Liberty.

254

That the Grounds of all Moral Obligations are Eternal and Necessary, and depend not on any Laws.
