Contents

List of figures viii
Acknowledgements ix

Introduction 1

Gender 2
Media 6
Gender and media studies 11
Structure of the book 14

PART I
Representing 17

1 Who is represented? 19

What are representations? – Different views, different research 21
Represented where? 25
Representations and reality? 35
Conclusion 37

2 Subject positions 39

The subject and identity 40
Subject, subjectivity, and media 41
Identity and media 44
Stereotypes 45
Gendered stereotypes 48
Representing gender in a global context 52
Gendered genres 53
Conclusion 58

3 Intertextual representations 60

Intertextuality 61
Disrupting gendered representations 66
As queer as 69
Queer subject positions 70
Disrupting gender roles 71
Gay – straight – queer? 72
Queering genres 75
Conclusion 76

PART II
Producing 79

4 Who produces what? 81

Media industries 82
The media professional 86
News media 87
Magazines 88
Radio 89
Television 91
Film 92
Music industry 93
Gaming industry 95
Conclusion 96

5 Power and gender in the media industry 99

What is the glass ceiling? 101
The organisation of the media industry 104
Glass ceiling and societal structures 106
Conclusion 113

6 Blurring production 114

Digital media? 115
Convergence culture 116
Produser 118
What does content creation mean? 122
Conclusion 130

PART III
Consuming 133

7 Who consumes what? 135

Studying audiences 137
Effect theories 139
Cultivation theory 142
Uses and gratifications 145
Encoding/decoding 147
Conclusion 150

8 The consumer situated 151

Identity and frameworks of knowledge 152
Media pleasures 156
Gendered pleasures 159
Resistance 164
Transnational pleasures 166
New pleasures? 169
Conclusion 170

9 Empowered audiences 172

What is sexualisation? 173
The history of sexualisation 176
Commercialisation of sexuality 178
Girls' agency 179
Productive power of the sexualisation debate 182
Postfeminism: #Feminism 184
Digital femininities: self-representations 186
Conclusion 188

Afterthoughts for the future 190

Glossary 196

References 207
Index 235