

Gender and Seriality

---

Practices and Politics of Contemporary
US Television

Maria Sulimma

EDINBURGH
University Press

Contents

---

|  |     |
|--|-----|
| List of Figures  | vi  |
| Acknowledgements   | ix  |
| Introduction: Serial Genders, Gendered Serialities   | 1   |
| Part I Serial TV Criticism and Girls   |     |
| 1 The Thinkpiece Seriality of Girls   | 25  |
| 2 Carousel: Gendering through Controversy  | 47  |
| 3 Navigating Discourses of Universality and Specificity:The (Feminist) Voice of a Generation?            | 68  |
| Part II Television Audience Engagement and    How to Get Away with Murder                 |     |
| 4 The Looped Seriality of How to Get Away with Murder   | 91  |
| 5 Outward Spiral: Gendering through Recognisability  | 113 |
| 6 Evoking Discourses of Progressivism, Social Activism, andIdentity Politics: Such an Important Episode! | 134 |
| Part III Television Authorship and The Walking Dead  |     |
| 7 The Paratext Seriality of The Walking Dead  | 153 |
| 8 Palimpsest: Gendering through Accountability   | 175 |
| 9 Neoliberalising Discourses of Serialised Survivalism:You Make It . . . Until You Don't                 | 195 |
| Conclusion: Archiving Snapshots  | 215 |
| Bibliography   | 225 |
| Index  | 244 |

Figures

---

|     |  |    |
|-----|--|----|
| 1.1 | No Sex and the City family dinners: rare instances of all female characters appearing together in one scene   | 33 |
| 1.2 | 'I hate you!': Shoshanna reacts with anger to Marnie's confession of her affair with Shoshanna's ex-boyfriend Ray  | 37 |
| 1.3 | The 'erotic' photo shoot breaks with the fetishisation of Hannah's body by, for example, prominently placing photographer Ray within the camera frame  | 43 |
| 2.1 | Shoshanna admires Marnie as the apparent embodiment of her aspirations   | 53 |
| 2.2 | Contrasting female and male intimacy in the 'bathroom scenes' of 'Pilot' (1.1) and 'I Saw You' (3.11)  | 62 |
| 2.3 | Transparent masculinity: Ray's final appearance concludes with a kiss on a carousel  | 66 |
| 3.1 | Girls 's last season did not deviate from its previous textual practices, which also meant that the portrayal of Hannah's parenting a baby of colour was fraught with ambiguity and omissions                   | 75 |
| 3.2 | A self-absorbed Hannah cannot get enough of her bright red coloured drink, which evokes vampiric associations of the 'unruly woman' as a parasite  | 78 |
| 4.1 | Tableau staging in a 'client shot' and promotional poster from the second season. This distinctive display characterises by contrast, highlights the cast's diversity, and positions the characters as jury-detectives | 99 |

|     |   |     |
|-----|---|-----|
| 4.2 | By dramatically comparing being shot to the attempt to follow the show's complex timeframe, this meme adopts Murder's melodramatic mode  | 104 |
| 4.3 | Leading ladies Kerry Washington, Ellen Pompeo, and Viola Davis share red wine and popcorn (with one another and with their viewers) in this #TGIT advertisement from September 2017   | 108 |
| 5.1 | In contrast with the prisoner's uniform of her client Rebecca, Annalise's outfit negotiates the pressures placed on black professional femininity within the racialised and gendered space of the courtroom   | 117 |
| 5.2 | Annalise kisses Eve goodbye on her porch. Some black female viewers found Annalise's willingness to wear a turban in front of her love interest to be an indicator of their strong connection   | 124 |
| 5.3 | Annalise arranges for Eve to defend Nate. Viewers were as torn as the character herself over whom they wanted Annalise to pursue a relationship with  | 130 |
| 6.1 | Annalise comforts her friend and client Jill before the transphobic behaviour of the authorities requires her to adapt her defence strategy   | 138 |
| 6.2 | In a rare scene of collaboration (4.4 'Was She Ever Good at Her Job?'), Annalise joins the defence team of fellow lawyer Tegan and her former intern Michaela to defend their client Soraya   | 143 |
| 7.1 | Top to bottom: first-season showrunner Frank Darabont with comic book writer Robert Kirkman; Talking Dead appearance by Kirkman, Laurie Holden (Andrea), and showrunner Glen Mazzara (1.13); Kirkman, showrunner Scott M. Gimple, Jeffrey Dean Morgan (Negan), and Norman Reedus (Daryl) ( Talking Dead 5.16) | 159 |
| 7.2 | Villain Negan's speech implies authorial self-reflection and reveals him to be a stand-in for Robert Kirkman (#100)   | 166 |
| 8.1 | Michonne equipped with her katana and zombie escorts/pets in the comic book and television show   | 178 |
| 8.2 | The brief appearance of Daryl's 'fanboys' Patrick and Zack in the fourth season amuses Carol and allowed the show to reflect on the idealisation of its most popular character  | 185 |

|     |   |     |
|-----|---|-----|
| 8.3 | Her selfless and gruesome death – a caesarean performed with a pocketknife – aspires to redeem the most disliked character Lori (3.4 ‘Killer Within’) | 193 |
| 9.1 | Screenshots from the first episode (1.1 ‘Days Gone By’) illustrate the comparison between Rick, Morgan, and the female zombies they set out to kill   | 197 |
| 9.2 | Talking Dead ’s sequence ‘Survival Tips’ featuring Matt Mogk (2.14); the ‘Survival Kit’ of AMC’s online shop                                   | 201 |
| 9.3 | Survival essentials worth risking your life for: colourful cat decorations  | 208 |