CONTENTS

Preface v

1. Introduction 1
   1.1. A preliminary map of the field in which philosophical reflection on the bearers of truth and falsity originates 1
   1.2. Impasses of the first attempts at theoretical reflection 6

2. Plato 13
   2.1. Introductory remarks 13
   2.2. Sophist 261 c 6 – 262 e 2 14
   2.3. Sophist 262 e 3 – 263 d 5 17
   2.4. Sophist 263 d 6 – 264 b 8 18
   2.5. Summary 20

3. Aristotle 23
   3.1. Thought, judgment, and belief 23
   3.2. The expression of thought in speech 26
   3.3. States of affairs, alleged and real 33
   3.4. The relation between thought and language 36
   3.5. Conditions of sameness and difference 39
   3.6. Summary 43

4. The Stoic lekton 45
   4.1. The lekton as what is said or predicated of something 45
   4.2. The lekton as what is said or expressed in an assertion 55
   4.3. The lekton as what is said or expressed in other complete speech acts 62

4.4. The lekton as the thought expressed 65
4.5. Summary of the hypothesis concerning the meaning of lekton 71
4.6. Appendix 72

5. The Stoic axiōma 75
5.1. The axiōma as bearer of truth or falsity 76
5.2. Further characteristics of the axiōma 80

6. Later developments in Greek antiquity 89
6.1. Fusion of terminologies 89
6.2. The perfection of sense 90
6.3. Kinds of speech 97

7. The transition to the Latin West 105
7.1. The Latinization of Stoic terminology 105
7.2. The first appearance of the term propositio 118

8. Boethius and the beginning of the Middle Ages 123
8.1. Boethius 123
8.2. Between Boethius and Abelard 135

9. Abelard 139
9.1. The signification of thoughts and the signification of things 139
9.2. Complete utterances and the statement-making utterance 144
9.3. The dictum as that which is asserted 150
9.4. The bearers of truth and falsity 156
9.5. Problems of sameness and difference 161

10. The doctrine of the dictum in the century after Abelard 165
10.1. The statement-making utterance 165
10.2. That which is asserted 169
10.3. The designation of that which is asserted 174

11. Preliminaries to the fourteenth century debate 177
11.1. The object of faith 177
11.2. The immutability of God's knowledge 185
11.3. Some relevant meanings of the word iudicium 189
11.4. The inner word 192

12. The complexum theory of Ockham and Holkot 195
12.1. William of Ockham 195
12.2. Robert Holkot 203

13. Some reist opponents of Ockham and Holkot 209
13.1. Walter of Chatton 210
13.2. William of Crathorn 212
13.3. Walter Burleigh 219

14. The theory of the complexe significabile 227
14.1. Gregory of Rimini 227
14.2. Other adherents of the theory of the complexe significabile 237

15. The opposition against the theory of the complexe significabile 243
15.1. Jean Buridan 243
15.2. Marsilius of Inghen 251
15.3. André de Neufchâteau 254
15.4. Pierre d'Ailly 259
15.5. Paul of Venice 266

16. The significate of a true propositio 273
16.1. The significate as the mode of being of a thing 274
16.2. The significate as the mental composition 276
16.3. Conclusion 279

Selective bibliography 281

Indices 289