

CONTENTS

|                                   |  |           |
|-----------------------------------|--|-----------|
| 1                          | Situating Psychopharmacology in Literature and Culture  | I  |
|                                   | Natalie Roxburgh and Jennifer S. Henke   |           |
| Part I Drugs and Genre |  |           |
| 2                          | Historicising Keats' Opium Imagery Through Neoclassical Medical and Literary Discourses                             | 23 |
|                                   | Octavia Cox  |           |
| 3                          | "Grief's Comforter, Joy's Guardian, Good King Poppy!": Opium and Victorian Poetry                                   | 47 |
|                                   | Irmtraud Huber   |           |
| 4                          | Dangerous Literary Substances: Discourses of Drugs and Dependence in the Nineteenth-Century Sensation Novel Debates | 69 |
|                                   | Sarah Frühwirth  |           |

Part II Rethinking the Pharmacological Body: Drugs and the Borders of the Human

- 5 Blurring Plant and Human Boundaries: Erasmus
Darwin's The Loves of the Plants 93
C. A. Vaughn Cross
- 6 Pharmacokinetics and Opium-Eating: Metabolites,
Stomach Aches and the Afterlife of De Quincey's Addiction 117
Hannah Markley
- 7 A Posthumanist Approach to Agency in De Quincey's
Confessions 135
Anna Rowntree

Part III The Cultural Politics of Known Drug Effects

- 8 Reading De Quinceyan Rhetoric Against the Grain:
An Actor-Network-Theory Approach 155
Anuj Gupta
- 9 Blood Streams, Cash Flows and Circulations of Desire: Psychopharmacological Knowledge About Opium in Nineteenth-Century Women's Fiction 171
Nadine Böhm-Schnitker
- 10 The Indeterminate Pharmacology of Absinthe in Nineteenth-Century Literature and Beyond 195
Vanessa Herrmann

Part IV Historicising the Prescription: Medication and Self-Medication

- 11 “She Furnishes the Fan and the Lavender Water”:
Nervous Distress, Female Healers and Jane Austen’s
Herbal Medicine 217
Rebecca Spear

- 12 “When Poor Mama Long Restless Lies, / She Drinks
the Poppy’s Juice”: Opium and Gender in British Romantic Literature 241
Joseph Crawford

- 13 Middlemarch and Medical Practice in the Regency
Era: From “Bottles of Stuff” to the Clinical Gaze 263
Björn Bosserhoff

- Index 287