

Contents

---

Figures and Table	vii
Foreword by Eugene A. Wilkening	ix
Preface	xiii
Acknowledgments	xix
Introduction: Ecological Visions of Nature in Rural Sociology	1
1. The Domination of Nature for Food and Fiber	13
Living on the Land: Biological Imperatives	14
Rural Social Organization	20
Technological Change: Creating a New Social Order	27
Ecological Dominance in Space and Time	30
Social Impact Assessment (SIA) Associated with Resource-Dependent Communities	33
Conclusion	38
2. Expanding the Domain of Nature	47
The Decline of Agricultural Communities	47

Expansion through Specialization	51
The Influence of the Changed Environment on Problems and Techniques	56
Continuity of Ideas and Approaches— Four Pathways of Influence	60
Conclusion and Suggestions for New Directions	74
3. Emergence of Nature as a Partner	93
Social Ecology Revisited and Revamped	95
Some Thoughts on a Social Ecology for the Future	102
I. The Role of Leisure and Tourism Systems as Strategies for Sustaining Rural Social Relations	104
II. The Nature and Types of Integrated Regional Resource Management Best Adopted for Sustaining Rural Social Institutions	109
III. The Role of Agroecology as a Strategy for Sustaining Diverse Rural Communities	114
Conclusion	119
Rural Sociological Society Natural Resources Research Group Chairs (1964–1988)	129
Index	131