
CONTENTS

Editorial Preface	xvii
Editor's Introduction	xxi
LAW, LEGISLATION, AND LIBERTY	1
Consolidated Preface to the One-Volume Edition	3
VOLUME 1 Rules and Order	13
Introduction	15
1. Reason and Evolution	23
Construction and evolution
The tenets of Cartesian rationalism
The permanent limitations of our factual knowledge
Factual knowledge and science
The concurrent evolution of mind and society: the role of rules
The false dichotomy of 'natural' and 'artificial'
The rise of the evolutionary approach
The persistence of constructivism in current thought
Our anthropomorphic language
Reason and abstraction
Why the extreme forms of constructivist rationalism regularly lead to a revolt against reason

2.	Cosmos and Taxis	56
	The concept of order
	The two sources of order
	The distinguishing properties of spontaneous orders
	Spontaneous orders in nature
	In society, reliance on spontaneous order both extends and limits our powers of control
	Spontaneous orders result from their elements obeying certain rules of conduct
	The spontaneous order of society is made up of individuals and organizations
	The rules of spontaneous order and the rules of organization
	The terms 'organism' and 'organization'
3.	Principles and Expediency	79
	Individual aims and collective benefits
	Freedom can be preserved only by following principles and is destroyed by following expediency
	The 'necessities' of policy are generally the consequences of earlier measures
	The danger of attaching greater importance to the predictable rather than to the merely possible consequences of our actions
	Spurious realism and the courage required to consider utopia
	The role of the lawyer in political evolution
	The modern development of law has been guided largely by false economics
4.	The Changing Concept of Law	97
	Law is older than legislation
	The lessons of ethology and cultural anthropology
	The process of articulation of practices
	Factual and normative rules

CONTENTS

Early law
The classical and the medieval tradition
The distinctive attributes of law arising from custom and precedent
Why grown law requires correction by legislation
The origin of legislative bodies
Allegiance and sovereignty
5. Nomos: The Law of Liberty	123
The functions of the judge
How the task of the judge differs from that of the head of an organization
The aim of jurisdiction is the maintenance of an ongoing order of actions
‘Actions towards others’ and the protection of expectations
In a dynamic order of actions only some expectations can be protected
The maximal coincidence of expectations is achieved by the delimitation of protected domains
The general problem of the effects of values on facts
The ‘purpose’ of law
The articulation of the law and the predictability of judicial decisions
The function of the judge is confined to a spontaneous order
Conclusions
6. Thesis: The Law of Legislation	154
Legislation originates from the necessity of establishing rules of organization
Law and statute: the enforcement of law and the execution of commands
Legislation and the theory of the separation of powers
The governmental functions of representative assemblies
Private law and public law

CONTENTS

Constitutional law
Financial legislation
Administrative law and the police power
The 'measures' of policy
The transformation of private law into public law by 'social' legislation
The mental bias of a legislature preoccupied with government
VOLUME 2 The Mirage of Social Justice	179
7. General Welfare and Particular Purposes	181
In a free society the general good consists principally in the facilitation of the pursuit of unknown individual purposes
The general interest and collective goods
Rules and ignorance
The significance of abstract rules as guides in a world in which most of the particulars are unknown
Will and opinion, ends and values, commands and rules and other terminological issues
Abstract rules operate as ultimate values because they serve unknown particular ends
The constructivist fallacy of utilitarianism
All valid criticism or improvement of rules of conduct must proceed within a given system of such rules
'Generalization' and the test of universalizability
To perform their functions rules must be applied through the long run
8. The Quest for Justice	213
Justice is an attribute of human conduct
Justice and the law
Rules of just conduct are generally prohibitions of unjust conduct

CONTENTS

Not only the rules of just conduct, but also the test of their justice, are negative
The significance of the negative character of the test of injustice
The ideology of legal positivism
The 'pure theory of law'
Law and morals
The 'law of nature'
Law and sovereignty
9. 'Social' or Distributive Justice	258
The concept of 'social justice'
The conquest of public imagination by 'social justice'
The inapplicability of the concept of justice to the results of a spontaneous process
The rationale of the economic game in which only the conduct of the players but not the result can be just
The alleged necessity of a belief in the justice of rewards
There is no 'value to society'
The meaning of 'social'
'Social justice' and equality
'Equality of opportunity'
'Social justice' and freedom under the law
The spatial range of 'social justice'
Claims for compensation for distasteful jobs
The resentment of the loss of accustomed positions
Conclusions
Appendix to Chapter Nine: Justice and Individual Rights	301
10. The Market Order or Catallaxy	308
The nature of the market order
A free society is a pluralistic society without a common hierarchy of particular ends

Though not a single economy, the Great Society is still held together mainly by what are vulgarly called economic relations

The aim of policy in a society of free men cannot be a maximum of foreknown results but only an abstract order

The game of catallaxy

In judging the adaptations to changed circumstances comparisons of the new with the former position are irrelevant

Rules of just conduct protect only material domains and not market values

The correspondence of expectations is brought about by a disappointment of some expectations

Abstract rules of just conduct can determine only chances and not particular results

Specific commands ('interference') in a catallaxy create disorder and can never be just

The aim of law should be to improve equally the chances of all

The Good Society is one in which the chances of anyone selected at random are likely to be as great as possible

11. The Discipline of Abstract Rules and the Emotions of the Tribal Society 336

The pursuit of unattainable goals may prevent the achievement of the possible

The causes of the revival of the organizational thinking of the tribe

The immoral consequences of morally inspired efforts

In the Great Society 'social justice' becomes a disruptive force

From the care of the most unfortunate to the protection of vested interests

Attempts to 'correct' the order of the market lead to its destruction

The revolt against the discipline of abstract rules

The morals of the open and of the closed society

CONTENTS

	The old conflict between loyalty and justice
	The small group in the Open Society
	The importance of voluntary associations
	VOLUME 3 The Political Order of a Free People	357
12.	Majority Opinion and Contemporary Democracy	359
	The progressive disillusionment about democracy
	Unlimited power the fatal defect of the prevailing form of democracy
	The true content of the democratic ideal
	The weakness of an elective assembly with unlimited powers
	Coalitions of organized interests and the apparatus of para-government
	Agreement on general rules and on particular measures
13.	The Division of Democratic Powers	380
	The loss of the original conception of the functions of a legislature
	Existing representative institutions have been shaped by the needs of government, not of legislation
	Bodies with powers of specific direction are unsuited for law-making
	The character of existing 'legislatures' determined by their governmental tasks
	Party legislation leads to the decay of democratic society
	The constructivistic superstition of sovereignty
	The requisite division of the powers of representative assemblies
	Democracy or demarchy?
14.	The Public Sector and the Private Sector	401
	The double task of government
	Collective goods

	The delimitation of the public sector
	The independent sector
	Taxation and the size of the public sector
	Security
	Government monopoly of services
	Information and education
	Other critical issues
15.	Government Policy and the Market	424
	The advantages of competition do not depend on it being ‘perfect’
	Competition as a discovery procedure
	If the factual requirements of ‘perfect’ competition are absent, it is not possible to make firms act ‘as if’ it existed
	The achievements of the free market
	Competition and rationality
	Size, concentration and power
	The political aspects of economic power
	When monopoly becomes harmful
	The problem of anti-monopoly legislation
	Not individual but group selfishness is the chief threat
	The consequences of a political determination of the incomes of the different groups
	Organizable and non-organizable interests
16.	The Miscarriage of the Democratic Ideal: A Recapitulation	455
	The miscarriage of the democratic ideal
	A ‘bargaining’ democracy
	The playball of group interests
	Laws versus directions
	Laws and arbitrary government

CONTENTS

	From unequal treatment to arbitrariness
	Separation of powers to prevent unlimited government
17.	A Model Constitution	462
	The wrong turn taken by the development of representative institutions
	The value of a model of an ideal constitution
	The basic principles
	The two representative bodies with distinctive functions
	Further observations on representation by age groups
	The governmental assembly
	The constitutional court
	The general structure of authority
	Emergency powers
	The division of financial powers
18.	The Containment of Power and the Dethronement of Politics	484
	Limited and unlimited power
	Peace, freedom and justice: the three great negatives
	Centralization and decentralization
	The rule of the majority versus the rule of laws approved by the majority
	Moral confusion and the decay of language
	Democratic procedure and egalitarian objectives
	‘State’ and ‘society’
	A game according to rules can never know justice of treatment
	The para-government of organized interests and the hypertrophy of government
	Unlimited democracy and centralization
	The devolution of internal policy to local government
	The abolition of the government monopoly of services
	The dethronement of politics

CONTENTS

Epilogue: The Three Sources of Human Values	509
The errors of sociobiology
The process of cultural evolution
The evolution of self-maintaining complex systems
The stratification of rules of conduct
Customary rules and economic order
The discipline of freedom
The re-emergence of suppressed primordial instincts
Evolution, tradition and progress
The construction of new morals to serve old instincts: Marx
The destruction of indispensable values by scientific error: Freud
The tables turned
Author Index	539
Subject Index	551