

Contents

1.	Introduction	1
1.1	Studying Groups in Literary Studies: Aims and Methodology	4
1.2	State of Research: Group Studies across the Disciplines	7
2.	Establishing a Theoretical Framework: Groups and Identities.....	11
2.1	“I – Me – Us”: The Nexus of Groups and Individuals	12
2.1.1	Contextual Selves? Personal and Social Identity	12
2.1.2	Interactive Selves.....	16
2.2	Groups as Social Systems	18
3.	Groups and Identities in Literary Narratives	25
3.1	Forms, Functions and Ways of Narrative Representation	25
3.2	Three Stages of Groups and Group Identities.....	30
3.2.1	Becoming: Similarity and Difference.....	31
3.2.2	Belonging: Experience and Performance	34
3.2.3	Maintaining: Memory and Group Identity as Inseparable Concepts.....	36
4.	Becoming: New Constellations, New Beginnings.....	42
4.1	Challenging Perceptions of Similarity and Difference: Andrea Levy’s Small Island (2004).....	43
4.2	Similarity in Difference: Nick Hornby’s A Long Way Down (2005).....	57
4.3	Comparative Conclusion: Negotiating Group Identities	69
5.	Experiencing Group Identity: Performing “Faithful Allegiances”	73
5.1	Ambivalent Roots: Zadie Smith’s NW (2012).....	74
5.2	Comparative Conclusion I: Collective Spaces.....	89
5.3	Forms and Formations: Jon McGregor’s Even the Dogs (2010).....	96
5.4	Comparative Conclusion II: Performing Groups through Narratives	109

6.	Maintaining Group Identities: Shared Pasts and Entangled Lives	113
6.1	Groups That Never Let You Go: Julian Barnes' The Sense of an Ending (2011).....	114
6.2	Sensing the End in Kazuo Ishiguro's Never Let Me Go (2005)	126
6.3	Comparative Conclusion: Memories as Tools for Belonging	142
7.	Outlook and Concluding Remarks.....	145
8.	Works Cited	154