

Table of Contents

Introduction	2
State of the Art	4
Chapter I
1.1. Carl Durheim (Bern, 1810-1890): the education and career of an eclectic draftsman	15
1.2. Analysis of the sources and primary literature	28
1.3. Carl Durheim's first reception in light of the first writings of the early history of photography in Switzerland	32
1.4. Entangled stories of early photo collectors	36
1.5. The Sammlung Adolf Fluri at the Burgerbibliothek Bern	39
1.6. Adolf Fluri: Charles Durheim und die Anfänge der Daguerreotypie und Photographie in Bern.	41
1.7. The Erich Stenger inheritance, and the expansion and publication of Adolf Fluri's manuscript	46
Chapter II
2.1. Details are clues	57
2.2. "...Probably she had been photographed here for the first time"	59
2.3. "The average dimension of a historical phenomenon"	65
2.4. The view of Bern, "von der Enge aus": an example of symbolism in the representation of landscape	74
Chapter III
Carl Durheim's second reception: the commission undertaken for the Justice and Police Department of Bern (1852-?)	85
3.1. The observers	88
3.2. Carl Durheim's identification pictures of the itinerants without citizenship: historical contextualization	89
3.3. The archival material	102
3.4. The lithographic albums in Bern	110
3.5. Albums from the George Eastman House in Rochester	112
3.6. Two Examples of Police photography in the nearby Canton Zürich	116
Chapter IV
"The collection promises to be thoroughly characteristic and interesting"	127

4.1 Clothing	129
4.2. The Alps and alpine population in the context of post-colonial studies	145
4.3. Who was Jakob Amiet?	153
Conclusion	159
Archival Sources	166
Bibliography	167
Appendix	186
List of Illustrations	219