

Contents

1. Introduction: What Rosalind Likes	1
Feeling the Fury	1
Virgil Problems	6
Problems with Sex and Aesthetics	11
Active and Passive Art	16
Burning Verses	21
2. Spenser's Rosalind: Flawed Poetry and Feminist Experiments	28
Bad Spenser, What Rosalind Hates	30
Static stanzas	30
Chasing the letter	39
Colin comes home	46
Radical Passivity	50
Badde is the best	51
Passive poetics	61
Late Rosalinds	70
3. Lodge's Rosalind: Virtuous Lightness and Queer Mythography	79
Before Rosalynde	83
Stoppe your eares	83
Calvin, Augustine, and aesthetic suspicion	90
Lodge's Rosalind	95
Poetic self-awareness	95
The characters of men	100
Virtuous lightness, feminine poetic virtue	108
Queer mythography: the Sirens	112
Queer theology: a wedding feast	121
Coda: Making Fun of Phoebe	126
4. Shakespeare's Rosalind: Homoeroticism, Tyranny, and Pastoral Concord	130
Ferocious Rosalind	131
Devising sports	131

Pancakes and mustard	137
Mark how the tyrant writes	144
The Throwdown: Translation, Conversion, and Virgilian Pastoral	155
Sweet translation	156
Thou art overthrown	161
Sweet conversion / “in which hurtling”	167
Technical afterword	170
5. Conclusion: Mary Wroth, Dora Jordan, and Katharine Hepburn	173
Tyrannical Style: Mary Wroth (1587–1651)	173
The Romp: Dora Jordan (1761–1816)	179
Morning Glory: Katharine Hepburn (1907–2003)	186
Bibliography	193
Index	199