

Contents

Foreword: The Man and His Work xi

Introduction: The Horn of Oberon xvii

The Aesthetics of Correspondence, xvii Artist and Audience, xxi Op-posed Modes: The Sublime against the Ridiculous, Humor, and Wit, xxvi Literary Genres, Characterization, and Stylistics, xxxv Application of the Theory: Critique of an Age, xxxviii Relations and Reactions, xlii Style:
The Art of Balance, xlvi Editions and Translations, lvii Bibliographical Note, lx

SCHOOL FOR AESTHETICS

Preface to the Second Edition, 3 Preface to the First Edition, 9

Course I. On Poetry in General 15

§1. Its Definitions §2. Poetic Nihilists §3. Poetic Materialists
§4. Closer Determination of the Beautiful Imitation of Nature
§5. Use of the Marvelous

Course II. The Scale of Poetic Faculties 28

§6. Reproductive Imagination §7. Creativity or Imagination
§8. Degrees of Imagination §9. Talent §10. Passive Geniuses

Course III. On Genius 35

§11. The Multiplicity of its Strengths §12. Reflectiveness §13.
Human Instinct §14. The Instinct or Material of Genius §15.
The Ideal of Genius

Course IV. On Greek or Plastic Poetry	44
§16. The Greeks §17. The Plastic or Objective Quality of Greek Poetry §18. Beauty or the Ideal §19. Repose and Serenity in Poetry §20. The Moral Grace of Greek Poetry
Course V. On Romantic Poetry	56
§21. The Relationship between the Greeks and the Moderns §22. The Character of Romantic Poetry and Differences between Southern and Northern Forms §23. The Source of Romantic Poetry §24. The Poetry of Superstition §25. Examples of Romanticism
Course VI. On the Ridiculous	71
§26. Definitions of the Ridiculous §27. Theory of the Sublime §28. Investigation of the Ridiculous §29. The Difference between Satire and the Comic §30. Source of Pleasure in the Ridiculous
Course VII. On Humorous Poetry	88
§31. Concept of Humor §32. Humorous Totality §33. The Annihilating or Infinite Idea of Humor §34. Humorous Subjectivity §35. Humorous Sensuousness
Course VIII. On Epic, Dramatic, and Lyric Humor	104
§36. Confusion of All the Modes §37. Irony, Its Gravity in Appearance §38. The Material of Irony §39. The Comic in Drama §40. The Harlequin §41. The Lyric Comic, or Whimsy and the Burlesque
Course IX. On Wit	120
§42. Definitions §43. Wit, Acumen, and Profundity §44. Non-figurative Wit §45. Concise Style §46. Circular Wit §47. Antithesis §48. Subtlety §49. Figurative Wit, Its Source §50. Two Forms of Figurative Wit §51. Allegory §52. Puns §53. Measure in Wit §54. The Need for Cultivation of Wit in Germany §55. The Need for Learned Wit

Course X. On Characters	148
§56. Characters outside Literature §57. The Formation of Poetic Characters §58. The Material of Characters §59. The Form of Characters §60. The Technical Presentation of Characters §61. The Expression of Character through Action and Speech
Course XI. Plot in Drama and Epic	164
§62. The Relationship of Plot to Character §63. The Relationship of Drama to Epic §64. The Value of the Plot §65. A Further Comparison of Drama to Epic §66. The Unities of Time and Place in Epic and Drama §67. The Slowness of the Epic; Its Hereditary Sins §68. Motivation
Course XII. On the Novel	179
§69. Its Poetic Value §70. The Epic Novel §71. The Dramatic Novel §72. The Poetic Spirit in the Three Schools of Novelistic Material: Italian, German, and Dutch §73. The Idyll §74. Rules and Hints for Novelists
Course XIII. On the Lyric	196
§75. The Ode, Elegy, Song, Didactic Poem, Fable, Etc.
Course XIV. On Style or Exposition	200
§76. Description of Style §77. Sensuousness of Style §78. Non-figurative Sensuousness §79. The Presentation of the Human Figure §80. Poetic Landscape Painting §81. Sensuousness of Images §82. On Catachresis
Course XV. Fragment on the German Language	218
§83. Its Richness §84. Campe's Purism §85. Miscellaneous Observations on Language §86. Euphony in Prose
 THREE LEIPZIG LECTURES
I. Misericordia Lecture: On Art, For Stylicists	223
(Some Particulars about the Lecture) §1. What and Who is a Stylicist? §2. On French Literature in France §3. On Franco-

Germans, or German-Franks §4. On Simplicity and the Classic §5. On Reviewers and Learned Journals in General §6. On the Middle Mark or Commercial Language of Taste §7. On the Universal German Library §8. On the Poetic Language §9. To the Stylicists §10. Short Postscript or Supplementary Lecture on Schiller
II. Jubilata Lecture: On the New Poeticists	272
(Some Particulars about the Lecture) §1. Caution for the Mind: Against Madness §2. Caution for the Mind: About a Certain Knowledge §3. Caution for the Mind: Against Partisanship §4. Caution for Minds: Against the Indifferentiation of Their Brains §5. Caution for the Heart: Against Crudity §6. Caution for the Heart: Against Pride §7. Caution for the Heart: Against Misanthropy §8. Caution for the Heart: Against Sensuous Love §9. Supplementary Lecture for This Year to the Poetesses
III. Cantata Lecture: On Poetic Poetry	305
(Some Particulars about the Lecture) Highest goal of poetry — Herder
Notes	316
Index	359