

Contents

Preface and Acknowledgments	xi
Introduction
Toward a Social History of Latin Literature	1
Author, Audience, and Medium	2
Ennius and Cato, Two Early Writers	11
New Genres of Literature, from Lucilius to Apuleius	12
Generic Preoccupations	17
One
Rome at the End of the Republic	20
Roman Education, for Better or Worse.	23
Literature and Nationalism	34
Literature and the Amateur	41
Literary Studies and the Recreation of Literary History	42
Literature and Scholarship, Caesar and Varro	47
Two
The Coming of the Principate: "Augustan"
Literary Culture	55
Two Survivors: The New Poets Gallus and Virgil	56
The Roman Poetry Book, a New Literary Form	63
Private and Public Patronage	67
The Emperor as Theme and Patron	74

Contents

The Best of Patrons, and the Patron's Greater Friend	76
Performance and Readership	84
Spoken and Written Prose in Augustan Society: Rhetoric as Training and Display	90
The First Real Histories	94
Three
Un-Augustan Activities	102
The Literature of Youth	102
Love and Elegy	106
Ovid the Scapegoat, and the Sorrows of Augustus	111
Innocence and Power of the Book	116
Four
An Inhibited Generation: Suppression and Survival	126
Permissible Literature: Prose	128
Moral Treatises and Letters	134
Didactic and Descriptive Poetry	137
The Scholar, the Gentleman, and the Pretender	140
The Tastes and Prejudices of Augustus's Imperial Successors	140
The Divergence of Theater and Drama	145
Five
Between Nero and Domitian: The Challenge to Poetry	153
The Neronian Revival	153
Poetry and Parody in a New Setting	162
Vicissitudes of the Epic Muse	167
Professional Poets in the Time of Domitian	172
Six
Literature and the Governing Classes: From the Accession of Vespasian to the Death of Trajan	183
Equestrian and Senatorial Writers, a Changing Élite	183
Choices of Literary Career: Fame or Survival?	191
Pliny's Letters and His Literary World	200
The Public World of the Senator and Orator	204
The World of the Auditorium	211
Seven
Literary Culture in Decline: The Antonine Years	222
Hadrian, the Philhellene	222
The Traveling Sophists	229
The Provinces and Latin Culture	236

Marcus Aurelius and His Teachers	239
Aulus Gellius, the Eternal Student in Rome and Greece		246
Apuleius, the Ultimate Word Artist	252
Notes	265
Bibliography	309
Index	317	