

Contents

Acknowledgements	vii
Foreword by Trevor Griffiths	ix
General editor's preface	xi
Introduction: theories of myth, agency and audience	1
Part One Popular TV drama: ideology and myth	29
1 'Soft' news: the space of TV drama	31
2 Genre and myth: 'a half-formed picture'	58
Part Two Authored drama: agency as 'strategic penetration'	87
3 'Reperceiving the world': making history	89
4 'Serious drama': the dangerous mesh of empathy	116
5 TV drama as social event: text and inter-text	127
6 Authored drama: 'not just naturalism'	152
7 Industry/performance: drama as 'strategic penetration'	166
Part Three Reading drama: audience use, exchange and play	189
8 'Use and exchange': delivering audiences	191
9 Sub-culture and reading formation: regimes of watching	210

Conclusion: comedies of 'myth' and 'resistance'	243
10 Comic order and disorder: residual and emergent cultures	245
11 'Marauding behaviour': parody, carnival and the grotesque	261
Notes	281
Bibliography	308
Indexes	316