

Contents

Acknowledgments	ix
1 Introduction: reformation and ideological transition	1
PART I Revolution in a pamphlet	17
2 Areopagitica : rhetoric, ethics, and the dislocation of the subject	19
Disruptive heresy: Milton's soulful books as monistic figures	21
Wider horizons: the Imaginary and emergent capitalism	35
Milton's politics of the moment: the temperate return of reformation	43
PART II The subject and primary reification	53
3 Possessive individualism, genre, and ethics	55
PART III The epic of emergent capitalism: a generic construction of Paradise Lost	79
4 God: epic, hexameron, and predestinary theology	81
Politics and the epic	82
The epic as gesture	96
Predestination	111
Milton's notion of Godly narrative	117

Hexameral structure	124
God	132
Epic hexameral: the counterplot	140
5 Satan, epic, and allegorical tragedy: predestinary ethos as desire	148
Satan and evil	148
Satan as epic symbol	150
The neutrality of Satanic gesture	158
Satanic drama	165
Satan as monist	174
6 Garden and fall: predestination as metaphysical lack	179
The narrative logic of paradise	185
Paradisaal amplification: paradise as utopia	188
Theology versus ethics: the ideology of the prohibition narrative	196
The ethical psychology of creation	202
The fall	206
Conclusion	216
Notes	219
Index	236