

CONTENTS

List of Abbreviations.....	XI
Preface.....	XIII
Introduction.....	1
1. From questioning towards knowing.....	7
1.1. "All men by nature desire to know".....	7
1.2. The natural desire to know the causes.....	10
1.3. "All that can be questioned or known can be reduced to four questions".....	12
1.3.1. Every question is in a certain sense a quaestio medi	14
1.3.2. The "katallel" structure of questioning and of the being "questionable".....	16
1.3.3. The "katallel" structure of the "what" question... ..	18
1.3.4. The "if" question (an est) and the order of questioning	20
1.4. The sense of the "what" question (quid est).....	25
1.4.1. "The 'what' question ... sometimes inquires into the supposit".....	25
1.4.2. "The 'what' question sometimes inquires into the essence".....	26
1.5. The question: What is nature?.....	31
1.6. The legitimacy of the desire to know.....	33
1.6.1. Augustine: Unvirtuous desire to know (curiosity)... ..	34
1.6.2. Thomas Aquinas: Studiositas and curiositas	36
1.7. The natural desire to know and the idea of circulation.....	40
1.7.1. "It is desirable for each thing to be united to its principle": The Neoplatonic motif of circulation.....	40
1.7.2. The desire to know in Thomas's reinterpretation of the circulation.....	42
1.8. The order of the questions an est and quid est and being as creature.....	45
1.8.1. Another mode of questioning.....	46
1.8.2. The origin of things and the question of being.....	47
1.9. The twofold sense of questioning.....	50

2.	By the way of predication (Per viam praedicationis): Definition and participation.	54
2.1.	“Being is said in many ways” (Ens multipliciter dicitur).	55
2.1.1.	Predication (per se and per accidens) and being (per se and per accidens)	56
2.1.2.	The division of ens per se into the predicaments of substance and accident.	58
2.1.3.	“Substance is said in two ways”: Subjectum and essentia	61
2.2.	In search of identity: Scire per viam diffinitionis	64
2.2.1.	“The definition consists of what is predicated per se ”	65
2.2.2.	Definition as “horizon”	67
2.2.3.	The way towards definition: Per viam divisionis	69
2.3.	Definitional thinking: Definitiones sunt sicut numeri	72
2.4.	The definition of nature.	76
2.5.	Predication per essentiam and per participationem	79
2.5.1.	Another mode of predicating.	80
2.5.2.	Every creature is being by participation (Omnis creatura est ens participative).	83
2.5.3.	Predication per participationem and per se	86
2.6.	The two tracks of predication.	89
3.	By the way of causality (Per viam causalitatis).	92
3.1.	Per viam divisionis : Cause.	93
3.2.	The reason for the division: The cause of generation (via in esse)	94
3.3.	Division of the causes of generation.	96
3.3.1.	Causa per se versus causa per accidens (chance).	96
3.3.2.	Division of the causes per se : Ars imitatur naturam	100
3.4.	Per viam naturae	104
3.4.1.	Natura . . . est via in naturam : Circulation.	105
3.4.2.	The common motive of both the way of thought and the way of being.	107
3.4.3.	The prior and later in the division of the causes.	109
3.5.	Another mode of causing (alius modus causandi).	112
3.5.1.	The necessity of another mode of becoming.	112
3.5.2.	The necessity of an origin of being in general: Emanatio	113
3.5.3.	“That which is said to be so by virtue of its essence is the cause of everything said to be so by participation”	116
3.6.	Per viam creationis	119
3.6.1.	Creatio ex nihilo	120

3.6.2. Creation and participation.....	123
3.7. Con-cursus	127
3.7.1. Per viam naturae—per viam creationis	127
3.7.2. Duplex ordo	128
3.7.3. Intelligibility	131
3.7.4. Grades of causality.....	133
3.7.5. Subiectum—essentia—esse : The problem of the “other”	136
4. The way of truth (Via veritatis).....	141
4.1. Intelligibility of being: Truth.....	142
4.1.1. The desire to know and truth.....	142
4.1.2. Being and true are convertible (Ens et verum convertuntur)	144
4.1.3. “Measure”	147
4.2. “Measure”: Truth and nature.....	148
4.2.1. Science is “from what is true” (ex veris).....	148
4.2.2. Per viam naturae: Termini stabiliti as truth.....	152
4.2.3. The natural thing as the measure of the truth of knowledge	153
4.3. “Measure”: Truth and creature.....	157
4.3.1. “There is the same disposition of things in being and in truth” (Eadem est dispositio rerum in esse et veritate)..	158
4.3.2. Per viam creationis: Natura imitatur artem (divinam)	162
4.3.3. God’s science as the measure of the natural thing...	166
4.4. Con-cursus	170
4.4.1. The unity of origin of the diversity of forms.....	172
4.4.2. Per viam exemplaritatis—per viam naturae	177
4.4.3. Are things more true in themselves than in the ex- emplars?	180
4.5. Retrospect	182
4.5.1. The reduction to Esse and Essentia	182
4.5.2. The double metaphysical reduction.....	185
5. By the way of reason (Per viam rationis).....	191
5.1. The discursive reason.....	192
5.2. The historical reason: “The ancient philosophers gradually advanced in the knowledge of truth”	196
5.3. “By the way of faith”—“By the way of reason”.....	201
5.3.1. Creation as an article of faith.....	202
5.3.2. Creation as a truth of reason: Christian philosophy?	205
5.3.3. “Reason,” “faith,” and “vision”.....	210

5.3.4. The “distress” of philosophy and the liberation through faith	213
5.4. The first known: Being (ens)	218
5.4.1. The nature of being which is first conceived by the intellect	219
5.4.2. The origin of the knowledge of being	223
5.5. Via ex nobis notioribus	227
6. Hodo-logy	230
6.1. Per viam sensus : The phenomenon of motion	231
6.2. Necessity and nature	234
6.2.1. The desire to know and the necessary	234
6.2.2. Necessity and physical contingency	236
6.3. Contingency and creature	239
6.3.1. The mutability of the creature	239
6.3.2. Thomas’s view of contingency	241
6.3.3. The creature as “sign” and as “thing”	248
6.4. “By the way of resolution” (Per viam resolutionis)	252
6.5. Resolution of movement	256
6.5.1. Principle and terminus: Matter and form	256
6.5.2. Per viam motus : Nature	261
6.5.3. Principle and terminus: Agent and end (finis)	263
6.5.4. Movement—Nature—Unmoved Mover	269
6.6. Metaphysical resolution	271
6.7. Esse is “the actuality of all acts”	275
7. Principium	279
7.1. Nature	279
7.1.1. Nature is “principle of motion”	279
7.1.1.1. “Intrinsic principle”	279
7.1.1.2. “Active” and “passive” principle	283
7.1.1.3. Potentia oboedientialis : Nature and miracle	290
7.1.1.4. The definition of nature and definitional thought	292
7.1.2. Matter is the nature	297
7.1.3. Form is the nature “more”	300
7.2. “Universal nature”	302
7.3. “Creator of the world”	310
7.4. Nature and creature	313
7.4.1. Concursus	315
7.4.2. The work of nature and creation	319

7.4.3. Matter as creature	324
7.4.4. Being is consequent upon form (Esse consequitur formam)	331
8. Finis	337
8.1. "The good is what all desire" (Bonum est quod omnia appetunt)	337
8.1.1. Being and good are convertible (Ens et bonum convertuntur)	338
8.1.2. "Nature"—"appetite"—"natural desire"	342
8.1.3. "The end corresponds with the principle"	345
8.2. "Nature" and "end"	347
8.2.1. Natura est via in naturam	347
8.2.2. "Nature" and "providence": "All naturally desire the good" (Omnia naturaliter bonum appetunt)	350
8.2.3. Nature and circulation	354
8.3. "All naturally desire God" (Omnia naturaliter appetunt Deum)	356
8.4. The super-natural fulfillment of the natural desire in man to know	361
8.4.1. The supernatural end of the "vision of God"	361
8.4.2. Duplex ordo?	364
8.4.3. "Two things concur towards the perfection of the lower nature" (Duo concurrunt ad perfectionem naturae inferioris)	366
8.4.4. The elevation to supernatural being: "Grace"	370
8.5. "Perfect": What has attained its end	373
8.5.1. Threefold circulation	374
8.5.2. Circulation and perfection	375
8.5.3. The circulation in the divine	379
8.5.4. "Grace perfects nature"	384
Epilogue	391
Bibliography	397
Index Rerum	409