

Contents

Preface	vii
Abbreviations	ix

PART I

1. Introductory: philosophical bearings	3
Methodology: contexts and concepts	4
Utopianism, millenarianism and political philosophy	17
The Fall of Man and the status of property	25

PART II

2. Thomas More's conception of the human condition	39
Philosophical traditions and the conundrum in More's thought	39
More's theology	48
The Fall and the human predicament	63
Tudor England as the fallen condition and More's analysis of private property	67

3. The Utopia of moral conduct	74
Communism and the Utopian economy	74
The state and the Utopian polity	83
The family and the community	87
The education of the virtuous citizen	93
The ends of life	95
The Utopian worldview	108
Freedom and moral behaviour in Utopia	110

PART III

4. Gerrard Winstanley's conception of the human condition	121
Winstanley's theology	121
The Fall of Man and the Myth of the Norman Yoke	131
Stuart England as the fallen condition	145
The prospect of a restoration on earth	151

5. The development of Gerrard Winstanley's thought	153
Premises and propositions	153
The Digger experiment	168
The interim phase of re-evaluation	186
The resort to utopian communism	191
6. Winstanley's utopian institutionalism: the ideal commonwealth	193
The communist system of The Law of Freedom	194
The moral regeneration of the individual	203
The coherence of Winstanley's utopian institutionalism	216
PART IV
7. Conclusion	227
Property theory and utopian communism	227
Changing intellectual perspectives	234
Notes	242
Index	278