PART I

WHAT IS

- Chapter I. FROM EXISTENCE TO DECISION* 3
1. The argument. 2. The age of meanings. 3. The age of words. 4. The two Russells. 5. The age of decision. 6. Philosophy as a unified discipline.
- Chapter II. THE EXISTENCE OF MEANINGS* 27
1. The semantics of Mill. 2. The confusions of Russell. 3. The structure of Russell's argument for universals. 4. The structure of Frege's argument. 5. Epistemology and semantics. 6. The failure of the epistemological argument for meanings.
- Chapter III. THE EXISTENCE OF PHYSICAL OBJECTS* 41
1. Three views on the existence of physical objects. 2. Russell's skepticism. 3. The theory of descriptions and the theory of proper names. 4. Two uses of the theory of proper names: neutral and belligerent. 5. Why the platonic meaning fares better than the thing-in-itself. 6. Moore's proof. 7. Russell's skepticism and Moore's proof contrasted. 8. Russell's philosophical method and Moore's contrasted. 9. Why the platonic meaning should not fare better than the thing-in-itself. 10. The validity of a Russell-like criticism of Moore's proof. 11. Why Moore's proof is unconvincing. 12. The conclusion of this chapter and the last.
- Chapter IV. THE USE OF 'EXISTS'* 60
1. Three views on the use of 'exists'. 2. Duovocalism: the doctrine that 'exists' has two uses. 3. Forestalling a possible misunderstanding. 4. An alternative approach to some uses of 'exists'. 5. The multivocalism of Ryle. 6. How Ryle might dispense with multivocalism. 7. Conclusion.
- Chapter V. CATEGORIES AND POSTULATES* 81
1. Are the existential statements of philosophers "analytic"? 2. Some elementary logical notions. 3. Quine and ontology. 4. 'Analytic' is not enough. 5. The universe of discourse is not enough. 6. Carnap, ontology, and analyticity. 7. The categorical and the noncategorical: a dubious distinction.

CONTENTS

Chapter VI. METAPHYSICS AND THE CRITERION OF MEANING 97

1. Are the existential statements of philosophy meaningless? 2. Postulation and the criterion of meaning. 3. Logical positivism and metaphysics. 4. The criterion of meaning, natural language, and "rational reconstruction". 5. The decision to make certain expressions meaningless. 6. Summary of conclusions on existence.

PART II

WHAT MUST BE

Chapter VII. A PRE-POSITIVISTIC VIEW OF THE A PRIORI 113

1. A priori knowledge and the existence of universals. 2. Ordinary a priori statements not about attributes. 3. Understanding and the subject matter of statements. 4. Logic and the synthetic a priori. 5. Recent discussions of analyticity. 6. Are all logical truths analytic?

Chapter VIII. THE ANALYTIC AND THE SYNTHETIC 133

1. The analytic and the a priori. 2. Platonism and positivism. 3. Analyticity and natural language. 4. The view that identity of meaning is more fundamental than synonymy. 5. The ascent to language. 6. What has been shown and what hasn't.

Chapter IX. ARTIFICIAL RESCUE EFFORTS 148

1. 'Analytic' is a philosopher's word. 2. Conventionalism, synonymy, and platonism. 3. Conventionalism, nominal definitions, and semantical rules. 4. The social contract, the linguistic contract, and performatory phrases. 5. Semantical rules: a way out? 6. A parallel in the philosophy of law.

PART III

WHAT SHOULD BE

Chapter X. THE NATURALISTIC FALLACY AND THE NATURE OF GOODNESS 167

1. From existence to decision. 2. Moore's ethical views and his philosophical method. 3. Ethics and analysis. 4. The naturalistic fallacy. 5. The same fallacy outside of ethics. 6. The simplicity of goodness. 7. The attempt at proving the indefinability of goodness. 8. The attempt examined further. 9. Is goodness a nonnatural attribute? 10. Goodness as an intrinsic, non-descriptive attribute. 11. Conclusions.

Chapter XI. SEMANTICS AND ETHICAL DISCOURSE 199

1. Moore and the ethics of logical positivism. 2. Three positivist tenets on ethical naturalism. 3. The concentration on ordinary language. 4. A logical difficulty in the positivist criticism of naturalism. 5. Enter emotive meaning.

CONTENTS

Chapter XII. BELIEF, PERFORMANCE, AND JUSTIFICATION 216

1. Belief and attitude.
2. Disagreement in belief and disagreement in attitude.
3. A useful specification.
4. Some relations between the two kinds of disagreement.
5. Performance and justification.
6. Three types of linguistic performance

Chapter XIII. ETHICAL ARGUMENT 227

1. From Moore to Aristotle: Does ethics require a special mode of argument?
2. What are the premises and conclusions of ethical argument?
3. The moral agent as his own moral critic.
4. Deciding that and deciding to.
5. The relevance of ordinary language.
6. 'Is' and 'ought'.
7. Prescribing and describing.
8. Against the view that ethics requires a special mode of argument.
9. Conclusion.

PART IV

WHAT IS, WHAT MUST BE, WHAT SHOULD BE

Chapter XIV. ETHICS, SCIENCE, AND LOGIC 251

1. Moral principles and scientific laws.
2. Rules.
3. Ethics, science, and logic.
4. The "old" ethics and the "new".
5. The real trouble lies in the notion of meaning.

Chapter XV. THE RIGHT TO BELIEVE 264

1. Recapitulation.
2. The general significance of ethical reasoning.
3. Agreements and differences with pragmatism.
4. Neo-pragmatism.
5. Beyond pragmatism.

Chapter XVI. BEYOND POSITIVISM AND PRAGMATISM 279

1. Philosophy is partly normative.
2. Ethics and science.
3. No positivism, no pragmatism.
4. The meaning of 'science' and 'ethics': more semantic dust.
5. The a priori and the a posteriori: a concession withdrawn.

Chapter XVII. HOW DO WE GO FROM WHERE? 289

1. Clearing the ground.
2. The finite character of the logistic thesis.
3. The universal character of Moore's anti-naturalism.
4. The link between universalism and intensionalism.
5. Description, performance, and evaluation in philosophy.
