

Table of Contents

INTRODUCTION 1

I. Purpose—1. II. Characteristics of Working Capital—1. III. Management Practice—5. IV. Summary—7.

PART ONE: ACCOUNTS RECEIVABLE MANAGEMENT

I The Credit-Granting Decision 11

I. Introduction—11. II. The Conventional Approach—12. III. The Discriminant Analysis—14. IV. The Decision-Tree Approach—23. V. Control Measures—27. VI. Conclusion—31.

II Collection Measures and Their Effectiveness 33

I. Introduction—33. II. Selection of Collection Policy and Capital Budgeting—34. III. The Markov Process and Cash-flow Estimates—36. IV. Application—41. V. Conclusion—44.

III Credit Policy Integration 50

I. Introduction—50. II. Cost Estimates—51. III. The Set of Decision-rules—57. IV. Control Indices—63. V. Conclusion—67.

PART TWO: INVENTORY MANAGEMENT

IV Inventory Management Under Certainty 71

I. Introduction—71. II. Relevant Costs—72. III. Basic Single-item Models—73. IV. Multi-item Considerations—91. V. Evaluation of the Inventory System—98. VI. Conclusion—100.

V Inventory System under Certainty 101

I. Introduction—101. II. Safety Stock and the Fixed-order System—102. III. Safety Stock and the Fixed-period System—110. IV. Comparison of the Two Systems—117. V. The (s, S) System—118. VI. Control of Multi-item Inventories—124. VII. Conclusion—129.

PART THREE: CASH MANAGEMENT

VI Cash Management and Marketable Securities 133

I. Introduction—133. II. Cash Management and Inventory Theory—135. III. Cash Balances and Portfolio Management—141. IV. Conclusion—145.

VII Cash Management and Working Capital: Integration through Programming Approaches 150

I. Introduction—150. II. Wealth Maximization and Certainty—151. III. Linear Programming and Uncertainty—158. IV. Goal Programming—160. V. Conclusion—164.

VIII Cash as a Residual Asset and Stimulation 165

I. Introduction—165. II. Simulation—166. III. Simulation and Decision-Making: Concluding Remarks—172.

REFERENCES 175INDEX 179