

Contents

Introduction	1
1 Setting up the research	18
2 Describing child speech in its conversational context	56
3 Some general characteristics of the data from the naturalistic observations	111
4 The sequence of emergence of certain semantic and pragmatic systems	134
5 The sequence of emergence: syntax and its relationship with other levels of analysis	188
6 The pattern of development over time	226
7 The children and their families	281
8 Variation in language development	321
9 The role of the input in language development	353
10 Learning through interaction	395
Appendix 1A Notes for transcribers on the procedure for contextualizing and transcribing language samples	417
Appendix 1B Conventions and layout for transcription	421
Appendix 1C Examples of transcription	422
Appendix 2 Frequencies of linguistic items in the speech of 15 to 60-month-old children	428
Appendix 3 Tables of features and weightings used in calculating item complexity values (chapter 9)	451
Notes	456
References and citation index	461
Subject index	473