

Contents

Author's Introduction	xi
PART I FUNDAMENTALS OF PSYCHOLOGY FOR FOREIGN LANGUAGE TEACHERS
1. What is psychology?	1
1. Why is psychology relevant to language teaching methods?	1
2. Some historical points	2
3. Fundamental principles of Soviet psychology	4
4. The object of psychology	8
2. Psychological aspects of personality and activity	10
1. The problem of personality	10
2. Activity and its structure	12
3. Personality and motives of activity	18
3. Speech and Communication	21
1. Speech activity	21
2. The structure of speech acts	26
3. Language teaching methods and the psychology of speech	28
4. Speech perception and the psychology of perception	31
1. Perceptive acts	31
2. The process of speech perception	36
3. The visual perception of a text	38
4. Problems of visualization	39
5. Control in foreign language learning	41
1. Conscious grasp and automatization in language acquisition	41
2. The basic theory of controlled learning	43
3. Language teaching and the theory of controlled learning	46
4. Programmed learning	47
6. Memory and foreign language learning	49
1. Some general facts about memory	49
2. Forms of memory	52
3. The functions of memory in speech activity	53
4. Uses of the laws of memory in language teaching	55

x Contents

7. Thought processes in foreign language learning	60
1. The problem of activating the learner's thought processes	60
2. What is thought?	61
3. Thought and foreign language teaching	65
8. Emotional and volitional processes in foreign language learning	67
1. Affect, emotion, feeling	67
2. Influence of emotional states on learning activity	70
3. The concept of will	72
9. Age and individual characteristics of learners in the foreign language teaching process	74
1. Basic concepts of age-orientated and differential psychology	74
2. 'A gift for languages'—What is it?	80
10. Social psychology in foreign teaching	82
1. What is social psychology?	82
2. General socio-psychological problems of school teaching	83
3. Social psychology and language teaching	86

PART II FOREIGN LANGUAGE TEACHING AND SOME PROBLEMS IN PSYCHOLOGY

11. Recent developments in speech activity theory and its relevance for the teaching of Russian as a foreign language	91
12. 'Thinking in a foreign language' as a psychological and methodological problem	100
13. Intensive methods in language teaching	110
14. Psychological basis of visualization in textbooks of Russian language for foreigners	131
15. The psychology of film perception	141
Notes and References	155