Preface V

1. Why discourse study? 1
   1. Why linguists should not study discourse 2
   2. Why linguists should study discourse 4
   3. The use of discourse studies 8

2. Discourse so far 12
   1. Rhetoric 12
   2. Criticism 14
   3. Exegesis 18
   4. Linguistics 21
   5. Empirical studies. 28
   6. The approach of this book 30

3. Events and participants in discourse 33
   1. Events 35
   2. Participants 43

4. Non-events in discourse 51
   1. Setting 51
   2. Background 55
   3. Evaluations 61
   4. Collateral 64

5. The speaker and hearer in discourse 71

6. Kinds of information in discourse 82
   1. A work sheet 82

2. Span analysis 91
3. Use of surface constructions 97

7. Constituency in discourse 101
1. Partitioning principles 102
2. Levels of organization 107

8. Semantic role structure 112
1. Content, cohesion, and staging 112
2. Role relationships 116
3. Orientation roles 119
4. Process roles 123
5. The agentive complex 126
6. Orientation-process counterparts 133

9. Semantic derivation 139

10. Other relationships among predicates 152
1. Associative relationships 152
2. Areas of meaning 158

11. The arguments of propositions 162
1. Constraints involving roles 162
2. Pseudo-predicates and consolidation 166
3. The complexity of arguments 175
4. Constraints not related to roles 176

12. Referential indices 180

13. The grammar of semantic productions 186
1. Formation 186
2. Transformation 194
3. Special mappings 198

14. Rhetorical structure 207
1. Paratactic predicates 210
2. Hypotactic predicates 212
3. Neutral predicates 219

15. Modality 230

1. Tense 230
2. Aspect 232
3. Mood 234

16. Discourse semantics and the surface hierarchy 238
1. Standard configurations 239
2. Alternatives to constituency grammars 248

17. Linear organization 256

18. Participant orientation 261
1. Permutations 262
2. Sequences of permutations 265
3. Permutation States 267

19. Cohesion 272
1. Information blocks 273
2. Information centers 280
3. Overlays 292
4. Information rate 297

20. Reference 299
1. The field of reference 299
2. Cohesive structure and reference 316
3. Viewpoint 319

21. Staging 323
1. Theme and modality 324
2. Theme and cohesive structure 329
3. Voice 331
4. Staging at various levels 333

22. Topicalization 337
1. Devices 337
2. Thematic partitioning 338
3. Tagging and reprise 342
4. Compound topicalization 342

23. Variability 345

24. Postsemantic shaping 349
1. Redundancy transformations 349
2. Semantic neutralization 351
3. Proposition consolidation 353
4. Performative saturation 355
5. Level formation 356

Appendix. Thematic linkage in Nambiquara narrative by Menno H. Kroeker 361
