

CONTENTS

Introduction	1
Chapter One: Political Activism among West German Authors from the End of World War Two to 1961.	39
I. Introduction	39
II. Involvement and Withdrawal: The Case of Der Ruf	45
A. The journal's significance for writers' political commitment in the immediate postwar years	45
B. The democratic socialism of the "young generation."	47
C. The assessment of political parties in Der Ruf	54
D. Resignation as a consequence of growing confrontation between East and West	57
III. Retreat into Literature: The Group 47 from 1947 to 1955	61
A. Formation and organizational structure of the Group 47	61
B. The absence of direct political involvement in literature and public affairs	63
IV. The Development of Popular Movements in Opposition to Adenauer's Military Policies	68
A. The movement against rearmament	69
1. A brief history of West German rearmament and the organization of popular dissent against it	69
2. Attempts to discredit critics of rearmament: the case of Reinhold Schneider and the "Notgemeinschaft für den Frieden Europas"	72
3. The "Paulskirchenbewegung" and the "Grünwalder Kreis"	76

B. "Kampf dem Atomtod:" The movement against nuclear armament	79
1. A synopsis of the controversy over nuclear weapons for the Bundeswehr	79
2. Statements by writers against nuclear weapons prior to 1957	81
3. Formation of a mass movement: the declaration of the "Göttinger Achtzehn," the committee "Kampf dem Atomtod" and the "Komitee gegen Atomrüstung"	84
4. The ethical responsibility to combat the spread of nuclear weapons: the example of Stefan Andres	92
5. The decline of the campaign against nuclear arms for the Bundeswehr	98
V. The Federal Elections of 1961 and the Search for an Alternative Government	107
A. The consequences of the "Kampf dem Atomtod" campaign for writers' future political involvement	107
B. The decision to endorse the SPD	118
1. Die Alternative: "Entstehungsgeschichte" and objectives	118
2. Arguments against the CDU/CSU	119
3. Endorsement of the SPD as the lesser of two evils	131
4. Skeptical Assessments of the FDP and DFU	137
Chapter Two: Political Activism among West German Writers from the Erection of the Berlin Wall until the Federal Elections of 1965	143
I. Introduction	143
II. West German Writers' Reactions to the Berlin Wall	146

III. Writers' Protests During the Spiegel Affair	155
A. Declarations of solidarity with the magazine's editors	155
B. The profound skepticism provoked by the charge of treason	161
C. The relationship between writers and the CDU in the wake of the Spiegel Affair	167
IV. Political Reassessments of West German Society at the End of the Adenauer Era	169
A. Remorse over lost opportunities: the collection of essays, Ich lebe in der Bundesrepublik	171
B. Publication of Bestandsaufnahme and the attempt to put the Adenauer era in historical perspective	181
1. The recollection and reevaluation of the political aspirations of the immediate postwar years	181
2. The discussion of foreign policy and the "German question"	186
3. The critique of the Catholic church and the "confessionalization" of public life	189
4. Assessments of economic development and the decline of socialist thought	193
5. The critique of restorationist tendencies in education, the media, social planning and the arts	196
C. The search for a consistent leftist perspective: Was ist heute links?	203
D. The continuing opposition to nuclear proliferation and appeals for a reduction of East-West confrontation	218
V. Writers' Involvement in the Federal Election of 1965	230
A. The relationship between writers and the Erhard government	230

B. Plädoyer für eine neue Regierung : the case for new leadership	233
1. Portraits of prominent Social Democratic personalities	233
2. Günter Grass's recommendation of Willy Brandt	253
3. Views from abroad	260
4. Additional arguments for a change of governments	266
5. Rolf Hochhuth's analysis of class conflict in the FRG: "Der Klassenkampf ist nicht zu Ende"	273
6. The controversy over Hochhuth's "Klassenkampf" essay	280
C. The "Wahlkontor deutsche Schriftsteller"	288
D. Günter Grass's campaign tours for the "Es-Pe-De"	292
1. Organizational aspects	292
2. The author's criticisms of Christian Democratic politicians	295
3. In praise of Willy Brandt	302
4. Grass's subjective presentation of the electoral alternatives	305
5. Public reaction to Grass's campaign appearances	317
E. Post-election evaluations of involvement in the 1965 campaign	323
1. Grass's harsh criticism of his leftist colleagues in his Büchner Prize speech, "Über das Selbstverständliche"	323
2. Statements for and against direct involvement in electoral politics	329

Chapter Three: 1965-1969	335
I. Introduction	335
II. West German Writers and the Vietnam War	350
A. The response to U.S. escalation in 1965: the declaration of the Group 47	350
B. The Weiss-Enzensberger controversy over solidarity with Third World liberation movements	354
C. The example of Martin Walser and the campaign against United States involvement in Vietnam	359
D. Vietnam and the shift of interest from the "German question" to anti-imperialist struggles in the Third World	369
III. The Dissolution of a Unified Opposition among Writers	371
A. Robert Neumann's attack against the "literary mafia" in Berlin and the ensuing controversy over the political role of the Group 47	374
B. The Grand Coalition and the response of critical intellectuals	388
1. Political alignments prior to formation of the Grand Coalition in December, 1966	388
2. Authors' reactions to the Grand Coalition	392
3. Walser's critique of writers' election aid for the SPD in the light of the Grand Coalition	402
C. Literature and protest: the controversy over Grass's "anti-protest" poems in Ausgefragt	406
IV. The Radicalization of the Student Movement and the Campaign against the Springer Press Empire	418
A. The Second of June, 1967	418
1. Student activism in West Berlin prior to June 2nd, 1967	418
2. The response to the shooting of Benno Ohnesorg on June 2nd, 1967	424

B. The campaign against the Springer press	428
1. Criticisms of the Springer press in the wake of June 2nd, 1967	428
2. Grass versus Springer: the case of Arnold Zweig	431
3. The meeting of the Group 47 in the "Pulvermühle" and the anti-Springer resolution	437
4. The disbandment of the Group 47 and heightened antagonisms between Günter Grass and the radical left	441
V. Reform or Revolution? The Impact of the Student Movement on West German Writers	446
A. The revolutionary alternative of Hans Magnus Enzensberger	446
B. The parliamentary reformism of Günter Grass as the counterpoint to Hans Magnus Enzensberger	461
1. "Zwischenbilanz:" Grass's commitment to parliamentary democracy	461
2. Günter Grass and SDS	465
VI. "Notstand der Demokratie:" The Campaign against the Emergency Laws	483
A. The development of a campaign to block passage of the "Notstandsgesetze:" activities prior to 1968	485
B. Enzensberger's critique of emergency legislation and the judicial system	492
C. Writers' arguments against enactment	497
D. The reaction to passage	508
E. Establishment of the "Aktion demokratischer Fortschritt" and the controversy within Kürbiskern over a parliamentary strategy	513
VII. The Debate over Political Strategy in the Wake of the Occupation of Czechoslovakia in August, 1968	523
A. The consequences of Soviet intervention for the radical left in West Germany	523

B. The reaction of Günter Grass	528
1. Recommendation of the Prague "model" as an alternative to SDS	528
2. Grass's view of the Third World as a potential sphere of East-West cooperation	539
C. Grass's intensifying condemnation of student radicalism in late 1968 and early 1969	544
1. The schism in SDS and the factionalization of the extra-parliamentary opposition	544
2. The equation of leftist radicalism with rightist radicalism	549
3. The "revisionism" of Günter Grass and the limits of protest	556
D. A comparison between Grass's assessment of student activism and the assessments of his colleagues	563
VIII. Writers and the Bundestag Elections of 1969	582
A. The "Sozialdemokratische Wählerinitiative" (SWI)	584
1. Strained relations between West German writers and the CDU in the spring of 1969	584
2. The goals, organizational structure, background and tactics of the SWI	589
B. The campaign tour of Günter Grass	597
1. The speaker's itinerary and the appeal to "reason"	597
2. The critique of the CDU/CSU	603
3. The arguments in favor of the SPD	610
4. The author's denunciation of leftist opponents and his blanket endorsement of the SPD	631

C. dafür , the election publication of the SWI	640
1. The format and strategy of dafür	640
2. Literary authors in dafür	649
3. The contribution of Heinrich Böll: "Brief an eine deutsche Frau"	668
D. The activities of writers on behalf of other parties	684
1. Authors for the ADF	684
2. The election statements of Rolf Hochhuth and Gerhard Zwerenz	688
Conclusion	701
Footnotes	717
Bibliography	785