

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Preface	ix
---------------	----

Chapter One

THE OPPRESSIVENESS OF THE JEWISH AND CHRISTIAN RELIGIONS AS DESCRIBED BY SIGMUND FREUD

I. Introduction: Freud and Feminists — Resurrection of the Father-god	1
II. Freud's View of Religion as a Phenomenon Limiting the Free Exercise of Thought	7
III. Freud's Implicit Definition of "Religion" as Thought Control Enforced by a Father-god	15
IV. Why the Father Limits Thought — Freud's Phylogenetic Explanation	20
V. Why the Father Limits Thought — Freud's Ontogenetic Explanation	28
VI. The Particular Consequences Implied by a Religion of the Fathers for Women	32

Chapter Two

ALTERNATIVES TO CONTEMPORARY RELIGIONS AS ENVISIONED BY CARL JUNG

I. Introduction: How to Build "Religion" — Suggestions to be Gleaned from Carl Jung	39
II. Jung's Hope for a Psychology to Revitalize Religion	43
III. Jung's Use of Revelation in Fantasy and Dream to Restore a Patient's Religious Outlook	53
IV. Jung's Interest in Adding Féminine Imagery to Religion Through His Assessment of the Assumption of Mary	60
V. Jung's Interest in Adding Feminine Imagery to Depth Psychology Through the Anima/Animus Model of the Psyche	66

Chapter Three

THE NEED FOR DEPTH PSYCHOLOGICAL PERSPECTIVES IN A FEMINIST CRITIQUE OF RELIGION

I. Introduction: Uses of Freud and Jung in a Feminist Critique of Religion	73
II. Rebellion Against the Father: Feminist Work Declaring a Radical Break with Jewish and Christian Tradition	79

III. Rebellion Against the Father: Feminist Work Implying a Radical Break with Jewish and Christian Tradition	89
IV. Jungian Directions in the Feminist Literature of Innovation	102
V. Epilogue: Strong Motives and Incipient Methods for Religious Reflection from "Experience" — The Convergence of Feminists and Psychologists of Soul	115
Bibliography	123