PART I: INTEGRATION AND TRADE

Chapter 1. The effects of European economic integration on the production and trade of manufactured products (Edwin M. Truman)

1. Introduction	3
2. The analytical approach	4
3. The patterns of results for the three basic shares	11
4. Trade created versus trade diverted	19
5. The reallocation of supply among domestic, partner, and non-member producers	25
6. The results for subgroups of non-members	30
7. The results by subsector of manufactured products	34
8. Conclusion	37
References	39

Chapter 2. An empirical examination of bilateral trade in Western Europe (Stephen A. Resnick and Edwin M. Truman)

1. Introduction	41
2. The model framework	42
3. The estimated model	44
3.1. Major assumptions of the model	44
3.2. Results and qualifications	46
4. The elasticity estimates	50

4.1. Direct-price elasticities	50
4.2. Cross-price elasticities	55
5. Policy simulation of the distribution of West European trade under alternative tariff policies	61
6. Retrospective policy simulations	62
7. Prospective policy simulations	71
7.1. The Kennedy round	71
7.2. The enlargement of the EEC	72
8. Conclusion	76
References	77
Chapter 3. Trade creation and diversion in the European Common Market: an appraisal of the evidence (Bela Balassa)
1. Introduction	79
2. An ex-post income elasticity analysis of Common Market trade	79
2.1. The method and its limitations	79
2.2. Trade creation and trade diversion for seven commodity categories	83
2.3. Effects on major groups of non-member countries	87
3. An input-output approach for analyzing Common Market trade	91
3.1. Description of the method applied	91
3.2. Trade creation and trade diversion for 11 commodity groups	92
3.3. Trade effects for individual countries	94
4. Alternative estimates: efforts at 'normalization'	97
4.1. The need for normalization	97
4.2. Other approaches to normalizing trade shares	98
4.3. Regression models of trade creation and trade diversion	101
5. Implications of trade creation and trade diversion in the European Common Market	103
5.1. An attempt at reconciling alternative estimates	103
5.2. Intra-industry versus inter-industry specialization	108
5.3. Effects on welfare and economic growth	112
6. Conclusion	116
References	117

PART 2: MACROECONOMIC IMPLICATIONS OF INTEGRATION

Chapter 4. A macro model for Western Europe (Stephen A. Resnick)

1. Introduction	121
2. Estimation of the model	122
2.1. The consumption function	123
2.2. The investment function	137
2.3. The wage equation	139
2.4. The price-determination equations	142
2.5. The production function	144
2.6. The tax and transfer equations	147
2.7. The other equations	147
2.8. The European macro system	149
2.8.1. Estimation procedures	152
3. Conclusion	154
References	155

Chapter 5. Dynamic properties of the European macro model (Stephen A. Resnick)

1. Introduction	157
2. Dynamic multipliers	158
3. The working of the dynamic multipliers	163
4. Cross-country effects	166
5. Conclusion	173
References	174

Chapter 6. Monetary integration in the European Common Market (Bela Balassa)

1. Introduction	175
2. An interpretative history	175
2.1. A period of stability	175
2.2. Currency crises and efforts of policy coordination	178
2.3. The crisis of 1971 and its aftermath	182
3. A permanent fixing of parities?	184
3.1. The policy assumptions of monetary integration	184
3.2. Policy objectives and trade-offs	186

3.3. The Common Market experience with policy coordination	189
3.4. Prospects for automatic convergence	191
4. The consistency of medium-term policy objectives	193
4.1. Consistency in a macro model	193
4.2. The mechanics of the calculations	197
4.3. Simulations with national targets	199
4.4. The compatibility of policy targets	201
5. Monetary arrangements for the transitional period	205
5.1. Nominal and real exchange rates	205
5.2. Adjustable peg or rate flexibility	207
5.3. Decision-making on exchange rates	211
6. Policy implications and recommendations	214
6.1. Arguments against the crawling peg	214
6.2. Limited flexibility and policy coordination	217
7. Conclusion	220

PART 3: POLICY ASPECTS OF INTEGRATION

Chapter 7. Structural policies in the European Common Market (Bela Balassa)

1. Introduction	225
2. Medium-term programming and policies	225
2.1. 'Openness' and planning on the industry level	225
2.2. French planning after entry into the Common Market	227
2.3. The 1962 action program of the community	229
2.4. The first medium-term economic policy program (1965-70)	231
2.5. Projections and realization	232
2.6. The third medium-term program (1971-75)	236
2.7. Programming and policy-making	238
2.8. The policy guidelines	240
3. Industrial policy in the European Common Market	242
3.1. The making of Common Market industrial policy	242
3.2. Obstacles to the interpenetration of industry in the Common Market	243
3.3. Legal obstacles	244
3.4. Fiscal limitations	247

3.5. Capital markets	248
3.6. Technical standards	250
3.7. Public purchases	251
3.8. Towards a common technological policy	253
3.9. Concentration and competition	255
3.10. Towards a coordinated industrial policy	257
4. Regional policies and the environment	258
4.1. Economic integration and regional disparities	258
4.2. Regional actions by the Community, 1962-72	260
4.3. National policy conflicts	263
4.4. Problems of the environment	265
4.5. A regional policy for the Common Market	267
4.6. An alternative scheme of regional assistance	269
5. Conclusion	272
Chapter 8. The effects of European economic integration on agriculture
(Eric Thorbecke in collaboration with Emilio Pagoulatos)
1. Introduction	275
2. A comparison of the agricultural policies of the EEC, the UK, Ireland, and other EFTA countries	276
2.1. The principles and mechanisms of the Common Agricultural Policies	276
2.2. Changes in the degree of agricultural protection	282
2.3. Agricultural and trade policies in EFTA, the UK, Ireland, and Denmark	283
3. The changing pattern of trade and production in temperate-zone products in the EEC and EFTA within the framework of world trade, 1953-69	287
3.1. The pattern of world trade and the origin and destination of EEC and EFTA trade in temperate-zone products	287
3.2. Commodity composition of EEC and EFTA trade in temperate-zone products and production and consumption trends in the EEC	289
4. Empirical evaluation of the welfare effects of the CAP	296
4.1. Results of previous studies	296
4.2. An empirical estimation of the static effects of the CAP	302
4.3. The statistical results	304

5. The effects of the CAP on the allocation of the agricultural labor force in the EEC: the dynamic effects of the CAP	310
5.1. Agricultural labor mobility as a factor of EEC growth	311
5.2. A methodology to estimate the effects of the CAP on labor allocation and income growth	312
6. Some implications of the adoption of the CAP by the enlarged Community	316
6.1. The UK and the CAP	316
6.2. The impact on world trade of temperate-zone products of the enlarged Community	320
7. Conclusions	322
References	323
 Chapter 9. European integration and the developing countries (Mordechai E. Kreinin)
1. Introduction	327
2. Institutional arrangements	327
2.1. Agreements with sub-Saharan Africa	328
2.2. Mediterranean area	332
2.3. Latin America	334
3. Effects of European integration on developing countries: general considerations	334
3.1. Trade creation and diversion	334
3.2. The terms-of-trade effect	335
3.3. Dynamic growth effect within the integrating regions	336
3.4. Dynamic implications of trade diversion	336
3.5. Investment diversion	337
4. The static effects of the European Common Market on developing countries	337
5. Trade relations between the Common Market and the Associated African States	342
5.1. Reverse preferences	342
5.1.1. Pre-EEC	342
5.1.2. Post-EEC	347
5.2. Preferences granted by the EEC to the Associated African States	349
5.3. Intra-Yaoundé trade	352
6. Effects of European integration on the exports of three countries in Southern Europe	355

7. The effects of the EEC's enlargement and the general preference scheme	357
7.1. Enlargement of the Common Market	357
7.2. The general scheme of preferences	359
8. Conclusion	363
