

Contents

	Page
1. Framework of analysis	1
2. Markets, competition and human resources	4
2.1 Governments: Negotiating reforms, deregulating or adapting to external pressures	5
2.2 German banks: Advising „Allfinanz“	5
2.3 British banks: Intensified competition on prices and new products	6
2.4 French banks: Promotion of financial innovations	7
2.5 Implications for human resource management	8
3. Training and recruitment	9
3.1 National systems of education and training	9
3.1.1 German corporatism	11
3.1.2 British voluntarism	11
3.1.3 French state mediation	12
3.2 New patterns of recruitment and training in the banking sector	13
3.2.1 German banks: Recruitment of „Abitur“ candidates and more emphasis on company specific training	13
3.2.2 British banks: Multi-tired recruitment and selective training	17
3.2.3 French banks: Graduate recruitment and modernisation of training	21
3.3 Banks as actors in sectoral training systems	26
3.3.1 German banks: Cooperation beyond initial training	26
3.3.2 British banks: Reluctant cooperation	29
3.3.3 French banks: Cooperation within a state-led system	33
3.3.4 Different capacities of banks to develop sectoral institutions	36
4. Conclusions	37
Bibliography	39