

TABLE OF CONTENTS

List of figures	VII
List of tables	IX
Introduction	XI
Chapter 1
Services and their management	1
1.1. Approaches to defining services	1
1.2. Some characteristics of service management	4
1.3. The value constellation	10
1.4. Frameworks for understanding services and their management	16
1.4.1. Bell's game metaphor	16
1.4.2. The drama metaphor	17
1.4.3. The servuction model	20
1.4.4. The 7P marketing mix	21
1.4.5. The RAPP model	22
1.5. Service quality management as a marketing strategy	24
1.6. People as the key component of service quality	26
Chapter 2
Customer presence and participation in services	29
2.1. Introduction	30
2.2. Perspectives of the desirability of customer participation	31
2.3. Types of customer inputs	32
2.4. The range of roles performed by customers	36
2.5. Customer ability to participate	38
2.6. Levels of customer participation	40
2.7. Customer willingness to participate	42
2.8. Forms of customer participation using Johnston's Framework	43
2.8.1. Provision of explicit services	44
2.8.2. Creation of environment	48
2.8.3. Provision of information	52

2.9. Some managerial implications of customer participation . . .	57
2.9.1. Role clarity	58
2.9.2. Ability to perform	59
2.9.3. Motivation to perform	60
2.9.4. Appraise customer performance	62
Chapter 3
The concept of customer-to-customer interaction (cci)	63
3.1. Cci introduced	64
3.2. Defining on-site cci	64
3.3. Towards a broader meaning of cci: some concepts	68
3.4. Cci in the context of the service encounter	71
3.5. The extent and incidence of cci	73
3.6. Classifying services for cci purposes	77
Chapter 4
The contribution of previous research and other literature related to cci.	85
4.1. Types of previous research	85
4.2. Non-empirical contributions	86
4.2.1. Customer-to-customer interaction in models of service production	87
4.2.2. General cci scientific literature	93
4.3. Empirical contributions	95
4.3.1. Studies utilising the critical incident technique (CIT) . . .	95
4.3.2. Studies utilising observable oral participation (OOP2) . . .	99
4.3.3. Studies utilising participant (and other) observation research	106
4.3.4. Studies based on questionnaires and focus groups.	109
4.3.5. Field experiment studies	112
4.4. Other relevant cci literature	114
4.5. Implications of previous research for the present study	116
Chapter 5
Research methodology and process.	119
5.1. Methodological considerations	120
5.2. The use of qualitative research methodologies in service research	121
5.3. Suitable research techniques for observing cci	123
5.3.1. Observational studies	124
5.3.2. Recall studies	126

5.4. The critical incident technique (the chosen research methodology) introduced	128
5.5. Description of the CIT methodology used in this study	132
5.5.1. Aims	132
5.5.2. Development of a plan for interviews	133
5.5.3. The data collection procedure	137
5.5.4. Data quality	138
5.5.5. Data analysis and incident classification system	141

Chapter 6

Towards a classification of cci: research findings	147
6.1. Introduction	147
6.2. The six main cci categories	148
6.3. The time category and its sub-categories	151
6.3.1. Discussion of time-related cci in queue contexts	152
6.3.2. Discussion of time-dominant cci ensuing from behaviour during service delivery	154
6.4. The space category and its sub-categories.	155
6.4.1. Discussion of cci related to allocated space and possession of objects	156
6.4.2. Discussion of cci related to 'use space'	160
6.4.3. Insights from research into personal space and territory	165
6.5. The verbal behavioural standards category and its sub-categories.	166
6.6. The information category and its sub-categories	168
6.7. The assistance category and its sub-categories	173
6.8. The non-customer activity category and its sub-categories	174

Chapter 7

Beyond classification: additional findings and insights into cci	177
7.1. The extent of cci and its sectoral distribution	178
7.2. The impact of situational factors on cci	180
7.2.1. The influence of situational factors on making incidents critical	180
7.2.2. Situational factors and customer A's response to cci	183
7.3. The negative: positive distribution of cci	185
7.4. Stereotyping tendency	190
7.5. Condition of anonymity	191

Chapter 8
Marketing management strategy: a cci-based perspective	195
8.1. Value creation – the starting point for strategy	196
8.2. Strategy formulation: some approaches to ccim	200
8.2.1. Service market segmentation and cci	200
8.2.2. Service delivery format and cci	208
8.2.3. Market research: cci detection	210
8.3. People management and ccim	213
8.3.1. The role of the manager in managing cci	214
8.3.2. The role of the employee in managing cci	218
8.3.3. The role of the trainer in managing cci	222
8.3.4. The role of the customer in managing cci	226
8.4. Service design and ccim	230
8.4.1. The service design process	232
8.4.2. Physical aspects of service setting design	235
 Chapter 9
Summary and directions for future research	241
9.1. The research approach.	241
9.2. The research methodology	243
9.3. Research outcomes	244
9.3.1. Establishing an important field of relationship marketing investigation	244
9.3.2. An extensive classification of cci	245
9.3.3. An application of the critical incident technique to cci	246
9.3.4. Insights into cci and explanations of cci observations	246
9.3.5. Managerial outcomes	247
9.3.6. Didactical applications	248
9.3.7. Other outcomes	248
9.4. Directions for future research	249
9.4.1. Refining the cci classification	249
9.4.2. Directions for future research in cci	250
9.5. Final word	253
 Bibliography	255

LIST OF FIGURES

1.1. Tangibility spectrum	8
1.2. Generic differences between the production and consumption of services and goods with implications for quality management	9
1.3. The chain of relationships	15
1.4. Model of value constellation	16
1.5. Services as theatre	18
1.6. The service performance cube	19
1.7. The servuction system	20
1.8. Composition of different elements in relations marketing – the RAPP model .	23
1.9. The interactive marketing model	25
2.1. A systems model of the service production process	33
2.2. The customer activity cycle (CAC)	35
2.3. Customer segmentation portfolio	48
2.4. Determinants of image	49
2.5. Implications of variations in demand relative to capacity	51
3.1. A multiple customer-to-customer interaction (three parties)	65
3.2. A continuum of service according to the extent of cci	75
3.3. Customer and employee interaction variety within the service encounter .	82
4.1. A cci-rich version of the servuction system model	87
4.2. Model 1: Service production from the perspective of the customer . . .	90
4.3. Three levels of relationships	91
4.4. A model of customer-to-customer relationships	92
6.1. The distribution of incidents by category	150
7.1. Sectoral distribution of cci incidents	179
7.2. The cci category distribution pattern for retail and transport incidents .	180
7.3. Negative: positive mix of incidents across c-to-c categories	186
7.4. Variation in the positive-negative mix of cci between different service industry groupings	188
7.5. Variation in the positive-negative mix of cci across categories for retailing	189

8.1. The operating fields of rogue customers	198
8.2. The cci importance-occurrence matrix	211
8.3. Negative cci blame attribution matrix	212
8.4. Service blueprint components	233
8.5. Customer-to-customer interaction enhanced service blueprint	234

LIST OF TABLES

1.1. Service characteristics and marketing problems	6
1.2. Evolution and transformation of customers	10
2.1. Three types of customer input	32
2.2. Modes and functions of customer participation	37
2.3. Levels of customer participation	41
2.4. Customer motives for participating in service production	42
2.5. Examples of the roles of the customer as employee	44
2.6. Customers as service promoters	54
2.7. Customer motivation to perform: Illustration of rewards and penalties	61
3.1. Cci characteristics illustrated for professional and consumer services	76
3.2. Methods of service delivery	78
3.3. Classification of services according to customer commitment level and delivery format	79
3.4. Horizontal interactions between external factors (customers) in a service process	80
3.5. Three categories of other customer(s) presence	83
4.1. Factors influencing the physical environment	89
4.2. Types and illustrations of protocol incidents	96
4.3. Types and illustrations of sociability incidents	96
4.4. List of categories for OOP2	101
4.5. OOP2 responses by expanded categories	102
4.6. Consequences of cci interaction in a retail setting	105
4.7. Behaviours of other restaurant customers reported as bothersome	109
4.8. Three key stages of gender-based cci in the traditional pub	111
5.1. Distinctions between quantitative and qualitative data	120
6.1. A classification of customer-to-customer interaction	148
6.2. Illustration of main cci categories	149
6.3. The sub-categories for the time-dominant cci category	151
6.4. The main causes of avoidable delay	154
6.5. The sub-categories for the space-dominant cci category	156

6.6.	Main types of 'use space' in service environments	161
6.7.	The sub-categories for the verbal behaviour-dominant cci category	167
6.8.	The sub-categories for the information-dominant cci category	169
6.9.	The sub-categories for the assistance-dominant cci category	173
6.10.	The sub-categories for the non-customer activity-dominant cci category	175
8.1.	Customer compatibility dissatisfaction reaction scale	211
8.2.	Cci sensitivity training	224
8.3.	Training in handling cci	226