

Contents

Preface to the first edition	v
Preface to the second edition	viii
Preface to the third edition	ix
Introduction: The origins and development of criminology	1
The development of criminology in Britain	3
The development of criminology in the USA	5
Britain's radical contribution	6
The past thirty years	7
Part 1 Crime and crime control: alternative discourses	9
1 The development of crime and crime control as social phenomena: the role of the police	11
Background	11
Early policing	12
Creation of the 'new police'	14
Central control or autonomy?	18
Policing from the 1960s	20
Police accountability	22
(a) Individual accountability	23
(b) Force accountability	25
Conclusion	27
2 Crime: definitions and conflicting images	31
Problems of definition and context	31
(a) Alternative definitions of 'criminal' behaviour	34
(b) Crime is in the eye of the beholder	38
(c) Crime as protecting the interests of the powerful	39

Conflicting images of crime	41
(a) Autonomous behaviour v structural forces	41
(b) Rich law v poor law	42
(c) Corporate crime v street crime	45
(d) Terrorism v justifiable state action	50
Conclusion	52
3 The statistics on crime and their meaning	53
Court statistics	54
Police statistics	55
(a) Reporting crime	56
(b) Recording crime	58
(c) The counting rules	62
Victim surveys	64
Self-report surveys	70
International crime comparisons	73
(a) Official data	73
(b) The International Crime Victims Survey	74
(c) The International Study of Self-reported Delinquency	74
Conclusion	75
4 The media and 'law and order'	77
Legal constraints on the media	77
Sources of the media's information on crime	78
(a) The police	78
(b) Other sources of information	79
Selection of crime news	80
The content of crime news	84
A media agenda?	87
The implications of the media's portrayal of crime	90
(a) Deviance amplification	90
(b) Moral panic	91
(c) Public perception of crime	94
(d) Effect on attitudes and behaviour	96
(e) Effect on sentencers	98
Conclusion	98
Part 2 Sociological explanations of crime	101
5 The classical and positivist traditions	103
Pre-Enlightenment Europe	103

The classical school	104
(a) Cesare Beccaria	105
(b) Jeremy Bentham	107
(c) Problems with classicism	110
The neoclassical school	110
The positivist school	112
(a) Quetelet and Guerry	113
(b) Cesare Lombroso	115
(c) Enrico Ferri	116
(d) Raffaele Garofalo	117
Evaluation	118
The classical and positivist approaches: later developments	120
Conclusion	123
6 Crime and the environment	124
The Victorian slum	124
The Chicago School and social disorganisation	126
Evaluation	131
Post-war developments in Britain	132
The Growth of modern environmental criminology	134
Effect on social policy—USA	136
Effects on social policy—Britain	138
Conclusion	143
Postscript: differential association—the interactionist link	145
Evaluation of differential association	147
7 Poverty, anomie and strain	151
Crime and poverty	151
Crime and unemployment	152
Economic inequality	154
Conclusion	156
Functionalism and anomie	156
(a) Emile Durkheim	157
(b) Merton, anomie and strain	162
(c) Durkheim and Merton	166
(d) Evaluation of Merton's theory	166
(e) Empirical support	169
Early developments of anomie theory	170
More recent developments of anomie theory	171
(a) Agnew's general strain theory	171

(b) Crime and the American Dream	173
(c) 'The Exclusive Society'	174
Conclusion	175
8 Subcultural theories	177
Frederick M Thrasher	178
William F Whyte	178
Albert K Cohen	179
Walter B Miller	182
Criticism	184
Richard A Cloward and Lloyd E Ohlin	185
Delinquency and opportunity: criticisms	188
Evaluation of American subcultural theories	189
David Matza	190
Subcultures: the British experience	194
Girls and subcultures	199
Conclusion	201
9 Interactionism and phenomenology	203
Interactionism	203
(a) Evaluation	209
(b) Policy implications	214
(c) Reintegrative shaming	217
(d) Conclusion	222
Phenomenology and ethnomethodology	224
(a) Katz's 'Seductions of Crime'	227
(b) Cultural criminology	229
(c) Evaluation	230
10 Conflict, Marxist and radical theories of crime	232
Conflict theorists	233
(a) Thorsten Sellin	233
(b) George Vold	233
(c) Ralf Dahrendorf	235
(d) Austin T Turk	235
The transition	237
(a) Richard Quinney 1	237
(b) William J Chambliss 1	239
Evaluation of conflict criminology	240
Marxist criminology	243

(a) Willem Bonger	244
(b) Richard Quinney 2	245
(c) William Chambliss 2	246
(d) Marxism and crime in Britain: 'The New Criminology'	247
(e) Evaluation of Marxist criminology	252
Post-modern criminology	254
Peacemaking criminology	258
Constitutive criminology	258
Conclusion	259
11 Realist criminology	261
Right Realism	262
Evaluation	264
Left Realism	266
Evaluation	270
Conclusion	275
Postscript: victims	276
12 Theories of control	285
Early social control theories	286
Travis Hirschi and social control	288
Gottfredson and Hirschi's individual control theory	291
Hagan's power control theory	296
Control theory in Britain	297
Evaluation	301
Conclusion	303
Postscript: Tittle's control balance	304
13 Gender and crime	308
The extent of female crime	308
Traditional criminology: biological and psychological explanations	310
(a) Cesare Lombroso	311
(b) W I Thomas	312
(c) Sigmund Freud	313
(d) Otto Pollak	314
Traditional criminology: sociological explanations	317
Female emancipation	323
Radical feminism	327

Conclusion	328
Postscript: masculinities and crime	328
Masculinities and crime: problems	332
Part 3 Biological and psychological aspects of crime	337
14 Biological factors and crime	339
Constitutional factors	339
(a) Cesare Lombroso	340
(b) Charles Goring	340
(c) Earnest Hooton	341
(d) William Sheldon and body types	342
Genetic factors	345
(a) Twin studies	347
(b) Adoption studies	349
(c) Chromosome abnormalities	352
Biochemical factors	355
(a) Neurotransmitters	355
(b) Hormones	356
(c) Nutrition and hypoglycaemia	360
(d) The environment	361
Central nervous system	361
(a) Epilepsy	362
(b) Brain damage and dysfunction	363
Autonomic nervous system	365
Alcohol and drugs	367
(a) Alcohol	367
(b) Drugs	370
Conclusion	372
15 Intelligence, mental disorder and crime	375
Intelligence and crime	375
(a) Background	375
(b) Intelligence and crime	377
(c) Race, intelligence and crime	379
(d) Conclusion	382
Mental disorder and crime	382
(a) Mental disorder in criminals	384
(b) Criminal behaviour in mentally disordered populations	385
The legal definition	388
(a) Mental illness	388
(b) Mental handicap	390

(c) Psychopathic disorder	392
Conclusion	396
16 Personality theories	398
The search for 'criminal' traits	398
Psychoanalytic explanations of crime	400
(a) The Freudian personality	400
(b) Phases of personality development	402
(c) Methods of dealing with instinctual urges	402
(d) Resolution of the Oedipus complex	403
(e) Later problems with the superego	404
(f) Maternal deprivation and crime	406
(g) Evaluation	409
(h) Conclusion	410
Learning theories	411
(a) Classical conditioning	411
(b) Operant learning	412
(c) Social learning theory	413
(d) Rational choice theory	416
(e) TV and film violence	417
(f) Differential association theory	420
Eysenck's theory of criminality	420
(a) Structure of personality	421
(b) The biological basis of personality	423
(c) Socialisation	424
(d) Gordon Trasler	424
(e) Evaluation	425
Conclusion	426
17 Violent, aggressive and sexual offences	428
Violent and aggressive offences	428
(a) Frequency of violent offences	429
(b) Explanations of violent offending	430
(c) Factors precipitating violence	434
(d) The aggressive personality	435
(e) Spouse or partner abuse	435
(f) Child abuse	438
Sexual offences	442
(a) Frequency of sexual offences	443
(b) Explanations of sexual offending	445
(c) Indecent exposure	446
(d) Sexual offences against children	447

(e) Rape	450
Conclusion	456
And finally . . .	458
Bibliography	463
Name index	517
Subject index	531