

Contents

Preface	page ix
Introduction	1
Part I The first phase of the reform process: the intellectual antecedents and the first corrective steps, 1953–1964	15
1 The first moves to correct the economic mechanism	17
2 The critique of the command economy: towards a new concept of the economic system	20
3 The turn: reform goals of the government and the practice of correction	30
4 Economic reform and the workers' councils	38
5 The principle of the substantial reform	45
6 A counterproposal for partial corrective measures	52
7 Immediate corrections to the operation of the economy	56
8 Intervention against the comprehensive reform plans as 'economic revisionism'	62
9 Minor corrections to the mechanism between 1958 and 1964	79
10 Organizational corrections – the transformation of company structures	84
11 The new model for agricultural cooperatives	93
12 First criticisms of the ineffectiveness of the corrective policy	108
Part II The 1966 decision on comprehensive reform: the second phase	111
13 Disequilibrium, tensions and shortcomings in the workings of the economy	113

14	Plans and preparation for reform in other socialist countries	129
15	The political background to the reform	133
16	The reform decision	137
17	Debates on the reform and compromises before its introduction	147
18	The main features of the new reform system	168
19	The plan and preparations for continuing the reform after 1968	194
20	The reform comes to a halt and reversal	201
21	The oil crisis and its consequences	232
 Part III The third phase of the reform process, from 1979 onwards		 235
22	Changing political conditions	237
23	Returning to reform	240
24	A new chapter in the debates on reform: the reform decisions of 1984 and 1987	246
25	The price reform of 1979–1980	259
26	Partial reform of the system of institutions	266
27	Internal contradictions and delays in the process of reform	275
28	A new role for small business	278
29	From reform towards a change of system	291
 Notes		 295
Index		331