

Contents

List of Figures	viii
List of Tables	x
Series Editor's preface	xi
1 Deception, selection and fairness	1
2 Why do people deceive?	21
3 The employer's deception of the candidate	43
4 Application forms, CVs and agencies	59
5 Interviews	79
6 Psychometric tests	103
7 Other methods	125
8 References	145
9 The consequences of deception	165
10 What can be done about deception	185
11 Improving selection methods to combat deception	205
12 Other checks on candidates	227
Glossary	249
Bibliography	253
Index	269

Figures

- Figure 1.1 A model of selection
- Figure 1.2 Gilliland's ten procedural rules of justice
- Figure 1.3 Suggested categorization of fairness in the British selection process
- Figure 1.4 Potential sources of deception in the selection process
- Figure 1.5 Types of misinformation in the selection process
- Figure 1.6 Types of deception in selection
- Figure 1.7 The continuum of deception
- Figure 2.1 Reasons for deception
- Figure 3.1 Deception of the candidate over the job
- Figure 3.2 Deception of the candidate over the selection procedures
- Figure 3.3 Sources of information about the job
- Figure 4.1 Examples of open questions on application forms
- Figure 4.2 A typical profile prefacing a CV
- Figure 5.1 Comparison of the traditional and the structured interview
- Figure 5.2 Influences on information exchange in the interview
- Figure 5.3 The candidate's use of impression management during the interview
- Figure 5.4 Questionable influences on the interviewer's decision
- Figure 6.1 Deception in psychometric tests
- Figure 6.2 Common characteristics of tests and their openness to deception
- Figure 6.3 The handtool dexterity test
- Figure 7.1 Sources of possible deception in other selection methods
- Figure 7.2 Typical exercises and dimensions in an assessment centre
- Figure 7.3 Examples of biodata questions
- Figure 8.1 Sources of deception in references

- Figure 9.1 Consequences of the candidate's deception of the organization
- Figure 9.2 The wider consequences of deception in selection
- Figure 10.1 Strategies available to the candidate in combating deception
- Figure 10.2 Strategies available to the organization in combating deception
- Figure 10.3 Typical questions from a selection audit
- Figure 11.1 Typical declarations on application forms
- Figure 11.2 Main objective and subjective information obtained from references
- Figure 11.3 Example of interviewer behaviourally anchored rating scale
- Figure 11.4 Part of a specific job related reference
- Figure 11.5 A typical item in a situational reference
- Figure 12.1 Suitable documents to check status under the Asylum and Immigration Act 1996
- Figure 12.2 Financial impact of using integrity tests

Tables

Table 7.1	Proportions of Industrial Society Survey respondents using practical selection methods for types of job
Table 7.2	Types of work sample
Table 12.1	The 'spending' of offences under the Rehabilitation of Offenders Act 1976