

Contents

Prologue I

CHAPTER 1. Actuarial Methods in the Criminal Law 7

I. The Rise of the Actuarial Paradigm 39

CHAPTER 2. Ernest W. Burgess and Parole Prediction 47

CHAPTER 3. The Proliferation of Actuarial Methods in Punishing and Policing 77

II. The Critique of Actuarial Methods 109

CHAPTER 4. The Mathematics of Actuarial Prediction:
The Illusion of Efficiency 111

CHAPTER 5. The Ratchet Effect: An Overlooked Social Cost 145

CHAPTER 6. The Pull of Prediction: Distorting Our Conceptions of Just Punishment 173

III. Toward a More General Theory of Punishing and Policing 193

CHAPTER 7. A Case Study on Racial Profiling 195

CHAPTER 8. Shades of Gray 215

CHAPTER 9. The Virtues of Randomization 237

Acknowledgments 241

Appendix A: Retracing the Parole-Prediction Debate and Literature 245

Appendix B: Mathematical Proofs Regarding the Economic Model of Racial Profiling 261

Notes 267

References 311

Index 331