

· CONTENTS ·

ILLUSTRATIONS

xiii

PREFACE

xv

INTRODUCTION

3

Ennui as an idée-force. Questions of methodology. Peripheral forms: désœuvrement, psychosomatic boredom, monotony, anomie. Descriptions of ennui: two imaginary concerts, Gide's Isabelle. A definition of ennui.

· 1 ·

THE BLACK GALL

15

Modern views of antiquity. Uniformity in heaven and hell. Aristotle and the melancholy creator. The wound of Philoctetes. Plutarch's Pyrrhus and the incapacity for rest. Plutarch's Cineas and the futility of action. Lucretius and horror loci. Horace: labor as an antidote for ennui. Seneca: the seasickness of Serenus and the nausea of Lucilius. The bored child. Hesiod.

· 2 ·

THE DEMON OF NOONTIDE

39

Acedia as a capital sin. The rise of monasticism. Acedia and modern ennui. Evagrius: the dangers of the noon hour. Acedia and the mystic experience. Saint John Chrysostomos and Stagirius. Cassianus. Gregory the Great: the popularization of acedia. Acedia in Dante's Inferno and Purgatory. Charles d'Orléans; exile and ennui.

· 3 ·

THE NAMELESS WOE

67

Celebrants of existence and melancholics. Petrarch and the secularization of acedia: the Secretum; the inoperative will;

CONTENTS

the dolce pianto of the Canzoniere. Dürer: the artist's melancholy. Marot: ennui as a fatality. Scève: circumscribed ennui. Labé: experienced woe. Ronsard: ennui as an incidental theme. Du Bellay: ennui as a negative force. Rabelais: the becalmed vessel. Shakespeare: the accoutrements of sorrow (Jaques and Hamlet); the ennui-inspired carnage of Richard III; life-harming heaviness in Richard II.

• 4 •

THE DISPOSSESSED MONARCH

101

The bored monarch in literature. Corneille's Cinna: the temporary disintegration of the will. Corneille's Surenas: the will turned toward the void. Montherlant and the royal fatigue. Pascal: the exiled sovereign; the inefficacy of the two methods of evasion; King Lear's prayer; supreme joy after ennui. Bossuet and the conversion of Mme de la Vallière. The bored Christ. Boredom at Versailles: La Fontaine and La Rochefoucauld. Donne: grief brought to numbers. Milton: melancholy and mirth.

• 5 •

THE DESCENT INTO THE CAVE OF SPLEEN

129

The splenetic Yahoos. Pope's Cave of Spleen. Goldsmith and the letters of Altangi. Sterne: the divagations of spleen. The minor poets: Anne Finch and Matthew Green. Wit and ennui in France. Mme Du Deffand: the shadows of the Enlightenment; the all-consuming tapeworm; ennui as a prime mover; saint or automaton. Voltaire, specialist in ennui: the dichotomy of insipidity and turmoil; Candide's garden of nothingness. Rousseau, speleologist of spleen: mystique of the void; onanistic illusions. The ordinary state of Diderot.

• 6 •

ELEGIES OF SUFFERING

167

Longing and striving. Werther: the instability in the affirmation of being; the destructive passion for the other; the flight from Wahlheim; return to the self-created prison; artistic sterility; the ultimate encounter with Lotte; the destruction of Lotte. Art as entertainment. Superficial boredom. Ennui as mother of the Muses. The Trilogy of Suffering: Werther's wept-over shadow; the vision of Marienbad; reconciliation with being. Faust; Philemon and Baucis; the confrontation with Care. René: the impossibility of self-destruction; culpability and malediction; exile and estrangement; delectatio morosa and the vague des passions; inconstancy and disillusionment; pride and solitude; negative ecstasy and the void; indifference and suicidal tendencies; incest as an expression of self-love; sadomasochistic tendencies; the letter of René; the poetry of ennui; the sermon of Father Souël. Chateaubriand and the poison of ennui. Rancé: an old René.

• 7 •

CHILDREN OF THE CENTURY

221

Jean Paul's Roquairol: the beardless Werther. Senancour's Oberman: acolyte or sycophant of ennui. Constant's Adolphe: indifference and mediocrity. Byron's Manfred suspended above the abyss. Sainte-Beuve's Joseph Delorme: the slow and profound suicide. Sand's Lélia: sterile beauty. Balzac's Félix: vitality versus ennui. Musset's Octave de T. and the whirling dervish. Büchner's Lenz: schizophrenia. Lamartine's Raphaël: the vacant house. Leskov's Lady Macbeth: lust born of the void. Flaubert's Félicité: the real center of irrealization. Zola's Lazare unresurrected. Life-in-Death.

• 8 •

THE DRAINING OF THE CLEPSYDRA

279

The background of radical pessimism. Leopardi, a historical child of the century; the Canti: echo of an echo; Zibaldone: the encyclopedia of futility. Schopenhauer: the illusion of existence. Hölderlin: Hyperion's assertion of reality. The Lake Poets and the refusal of melancholy. Hugo: the ontological affirmation. Stendhal: the aesthetic affirmation. Balzac and the fruits of bleak incuriosity. Verlaine: the vertigo of ennui. Rimbaud: the flower-filled abyss. Mallarmé: Igitur's celebration of absence. Laforgue's hypertrophic heart. Huysmans: man adrift. Kierkegaard: the emergence from the Dead Sea. Maupassant: the ultimate submission to ennui. Montégut's hypochondriac: the corruption of ennui.

CONTENTS

• 9 •

WITHIN THE FLATTENED CYLINDER

33<sup>1</sup>

Physical exhaustion and spiritual lassitude. Three visions of the modern world: Hemingway's antiseptic café; Beckett's flattened cylinder; Kafka's hovel. Valéry: ennui as absolute lucidity. Proust's victory over time and ennui. Mann: the world as a sanatorium. The gratuitous crime in the Catholic novel. Bernanos: the escape from the house without joy; the cancer of ennui; the dead parish. The surrealist quest for the marvelous. Desnos and the mirages of ennui. Gide: the lamp of the servant.

CONCLUSION

375

BIBLIOGRAPHY

379

INDEX

387

· ILLUSTRATIONS ·

Frontispiece, Giorgio de Chirico's Melancholy

1. A lekythos in the manner of the Eretria Painter

14

2. Accidia, a detail from Hieronymus Bosch's
The Seven Deadly Sins

38

3. Night, from Michelangelo's Monument to Guiliano dei Medici

66

4. A Concert at Asolo, in the manner of Giogione

100

5. Joseph Ducreux, The Yawner: A Self Portrait

128

6. Henry Fuseli, Here I and sorrows sit

166

7. Detail from Tableau Critique de l'Europe

220

8. Honoré Daumier's Six mois de mariage

278

9. Giorgio de Chirico's The Mystery and Melancholy of a Street

330